As discussed in the previous section, dragon kings often arise in systems where other events follow a power law distribution. Mechanisms generating power laws are well-studied under the framework of self-organized criticality (SOC). Many systems exhibiting dragon kings alongside power laws can be understood by how their dynamics differ from pure SOC.[20] SOC typically involves self-organization (SO) around a continuous absorbing-state phase transition (ASPT), where SO refers to an emergent balance between external driving and internal dissipation, and ASPT marks a transition between active and inactive (absorbing) phases. If this phase transition is first-order (discontinuous), it produces hysteresis, leading to large dragon king events.[25][26] Even continuous transitions, which typically result in SOC, can enter regimes that produce dragon kings, depending on the nuances of the driving and dissipation.[20] The figure on the right illustrates the taxonomy of dragon kings based on this classification: Set A includes all dragon kings, while sets B and C distinguish between those with self-organization near continuous and discontinuous transitions. Sets D and E further focus on cases with specifically absorbing-state transitions.

Dragon kings as statistical outliers

Probability density function schematic where the dragon king regime is represented by a lump of mass deep in the tail

Dragon kings are outliers by definition. However, when calling DKs outliers there is an important proviso: In standard statistics outliers are typically erroneous values and are discarded, or statistical methods are chosen that are somehow insensitive to outliers. Contrariwise, DKs are outliers that are highly informative, and should be the focus of much statistical attention. Thus a first step is identifying DKs in historical data. Existing tests are either based on the asymptotic properties of the empirical distribution function (EDF)[13] or on an assumption about the underlying cumulative distribution function (CDF) of the data.[7]

It turns out that testing for outliers relative to an exponential distribution is very general. The latter follows from the Pickands–Balkema–de Haan theorem of extreme value theory which states that a wide range of distributions asymptotically (above high thresholds) have exponential or power law tails. As an aside, this is one explanation why power law tails are so common when studying extremes. To finish the point, since the natural logarithm of a power law tail is exponential, one can take the logarithm of power law data and then test for outliers relative to an exponential tail. There are many test statistics and techniques for testing for outliers in an exponential sample. An inward test sequentially tests the largest point, then the second largest, and so on, until the first test that is not rejected (i.e., the null hypothesis that the point is not an outlier is not rejected). The number of rejected tests identifies the number of outliers. For instance, where

$x_{(n)}$

$\{x_{(1)} > x_{(2)} > \dots > x_{(n)}\}$ is the sorted sample, the inward robust test uses the test statistic

$T_{r,m}$

$\{T_{r,m} = x_{(r)} / (x_{(m)} + \dots + x_{(n)})\}$ where r is the point being tested

{\displaystyle (r=1,2,3,\ldots)}, and {\displaystyle r<m<n} where m is the pre-specified maximum number of outliers. At each step the p-value for the test statistic must be computed and, if lower than some level, the test rejected. This test has many desirable properties: It does not require that the number of outliers be specified, it is not prone to under (masking) and over (swamping) estimation of the number outliers, it is easy to implement, and the test is independent of the value of the parameter of the exponential tail.[7]

Examples

(II) Empirical CCDF of the log of radiation released (grey dashed) and damage (black) caused by accidents at nuclear power plants, with solid lines giving the fitted power law tail. (III) Empirical CCDF of populations in urban agglomerations within a country, scaled so that the second largest has size 1. Outliers are labeled.[7]

Some examples of where dragon kings have been detected as outliers include:[7][13] financial crashes as measured by drawdowns, where the outliers correspond to terrorist attacks (e.g., the 2005 London bombing), and the flash crash of 2010;

the radiation released and financial losses caused by accidents at nuclear power plants, where outliers correspond to runaway disasters where safety mechanisms were overwhelmed;

the largest city (measured by the population in its agglomeration) in the population of cities within a country, where the largest city plays a disproportionately important role in the dynamics of the country, and benefits from unique growth;

intraday wholesale electricity prices; and three-wave nonlinear interaction—it is possible to suppress the emergence of dragon kings.[27]

Modeling and prediction

Predictability based on interaction and diversity in a system[28]

How one models and predicts dragon kings depends on the underlying mechanism.

However, the common approach will require continuous monitoring of the focal system and comparing measurements with a (non-linear or complex) dynamic model. It has been proposed that the more homogeneous the system, and the stronger its interactions, the more predictable it will be.[28]

Modeling and prediction of a bubble (super-exponential growth) with the log-periodic power law[29]

For instance, in non-linear systems with phase transitions at a critical point, it is well known that a window of predictability occurs in the neighborhood of the critical point due to precursory signs: the system recovers more slowly from perturbations, autocorrelation changes, variance increases, spatial coherence increases, etc.[30][31] These properties have been used for prediction in many applications ranging from changes in the bio-sphere[14] to rupture of pressure tanks on the Ariane rocket.[32] The applications to a wide range of phenomena have stimulated the complex systems perspective, which is a trans-disciplinary approach and do not depend on the first-principles understanding.

Four regimes of views per day of YouTube videos.[33]

For the phenomena of unsustainable growth (e.g., of populations or stock prices), one can consider a growth model that features a finite time singularity, which is a critical point where the growth regime changes. In systems that are discrete scale invariant such a model is power law growth, decorated with a log-periodic function.[34][35] Fitting this model on the growth data (non-linear regression) allows for the prediction of the singularity, i.e., the end of unsustainable growth. This has been applied to many problems,[3] for instance: rupture in materials,[32][36] earthquakes,[37] and the growth and burst of bubbles in financial markets[12][38][39][40][41]

An interesting dynamic to consider, that may reveal the development of a block-buster success, is epidemic phenomena: e.g., the spread of plague, viral phenomena in media, the spread of panic and volatility in stock markets, etc. In such a case, a powerful approach is to decompose activity/fluctuations into exogeneous and endogeneous parts, and learn about the endogenous dynamics that may lead to highly influential bursts in activity.[33][42][43]

Prediction and decision-making

Given a model and data, one can obtain a statistical model estimate. This model estimate can then be used to compute interesting quantities such as the conditional probability of the occurrence of a dragon king event in a future time interval, and the most probable occurrence time. When doing statistical modeling of extremes, and using complex or nonlinear dynamic models, there is bound to be substantial uncertainty. Thus, one should be diligent in uncertainty quantification: not only considering the randomness present in the fitted stochastic model, but also the uncertainty of its estimated parameters (e.g., with Bayesian techniques or by first simulating parameters and then simulating from the model with those parameters), and the uncertainty in model selection (e.g., by considering an ensemble of different models).

One can then use the estimated probabilities and their associated uncertainties to inform decisions. In the simplest case, one performs a binary classification: predicting that a dragon king will occur in a future interval if its probability of occurrence is high enough, with sufficient certainty. For instance, one may take a specific action if a dragon king is predicted to occur. An optimal decision will then balance the cost of false negatives/false positives and misses/false alarms according to a specified loss function. For instance, if the cost of a miss is very large relative to the cost of a false alarm, the optimal decision will detect dragon kings more frequently than they occur. One should also study the true positive rate of the prediction. The smaller this value is, the weaker the test, and the closer one is to black swan territory. In practice the selection of the optimal decision, and the computation of its properties must be done by cross validation with historical data (if available), or on simulated data (if one knows how to simulate the dragon kings).

In a dynamic setting the dataset will grow over time, and the model estimate, and its estimated probabilities will evolve. One may then consider combining the sequence of estimates/probabilities when performing prediction. In this dynamic setting, the test will likely be weak most of the time (e.g., when the system is around equilibrium), but as one approaches a dragon king, and precursors become visible, the true positive rate should increase.

The importance of extreme risks

Dragon kings form special kinds of events leading to extreme risks (which can also be opportunities). That extreme risks are important and should be self-evident. Natural disasters provide many examples (e.g., asteroid impacts leading to extinction). Some statistical examples of the effect of extremes are that: the largest nuclear power plant accident (Chernobyl disaster) had a roughly equal damage cost (as measured by estimated US dollar cost) as all (+- 175) other historical nuclear accidents together,[44] the largest 10 percent of private data breaches from organizations accounts for 99 percent of the total breached private information,[45] the largest five epidemics since 1900 caused 20 times the fatalities of the remaining 1363,[7][46] etc. In general such statistics arrive in the presence of heavy-tailed distributions, and the presence of dragon kings will augment the already oversized effect of extreme events.

Despite the importance of extreme events, due to ignorance, misaligned incentives, and cognitive biases, there is often a failure to adequately anticipate them. Technically speaking, this leads to poorly specified models where distributions that are not heavy-tailed enough, and under-appreciate both serial and multivariate dependence of extreme events. Some examples of such failures in risk assessment include the use of Gaussian models in finance (Black–Scholes, the Gaussian copula, LTCM), the use of Gaussian processes and linear wave theory failing to predict the occurrence of rogue waves, the failure of economic models in general to predict the 2008 financial crisis, and the under-appreciation of external events, cascades, and nonlinear effects in probabilistic risk assessment, leading to not anticipating the Fukushima Daiichi nuclear disaster in 2011. Such influential failures emphasize the importance of the study of extremes.

Risk management

The dragon king concept raises many questions about how one can deal with risk. Of course, if possible, exposure to large risks should be avoided (often referred to as the "black swan approach"). However, in many developments, exposure to risk is a necessity, and a trade-off between risk and return needs to be navigated.

In an adaptive system, where prediction of dragon kings is successful, one can act to defend the system or even profit. How to design such resilient systems, as well as their real time risk monitoring systems,[47] is an important and interdisciplinary problem where dragon kings must be considered.

On another note, when it comes to the quantification of risk in a given system (whether it be a bank, an insurance company, a dike, a bridge, or a socio-economic system), risk needs to be accounted for over a period, such as annually. Typically one is interested in statistics such as the annual probability of loss or damage in excess of some value (value at risk), other tail risk measures, and return periods. To provide such risk characterizations, the dynamic dragon kings must be reasoned about in terms of annual frequency and severity statistics. These frequency and severity statistics can then be brought together in a model such as a compound Poisson process.

Provided that the statistical properties of the system are consistent over time (stationary), frequency and severity statistics may be constructed based on past observations, simulations, and/or assumptions. If not, one may only construct scenarios. However, in any case, given the uncertainty present, a range of scenarios should be considered. Due to the shortage of data for extreme events, the principle of parsimony, and theoretical results from extreme value theory about universal tail models, one typically relies on a generalized Pareto distribution (GPD) tail model. However such a model excludes DKs. Thus, when one has sufficient reason to believe that dragon kings are present, or if one simply wants to consider a scenario, one may e.g., consider a density mixture of a GPD and a density for the DK regime.

[7 / 1]The image is a digital illustration of a character that resembles a frog with a human-like face. The character has a green body with a blue shirt and is depicted with a serious expression. It has large, round black eyes with a white pupil, a small nose, and a slightly downturned mouth. The character's hands are folded in front of it, and it appears to be in a contemplative or thoughtful pose. The background of the image is a solid light blue color. There are no texts or additional elements in the image. The style of the image is cartoonish and simplistic, with a focus on the character's facial expression.

[4 / 1]The image is a black and white photograph featuring a man with a beard and a full, bushy beard. The man appears to be in a contemplative or introspective mood, with his eyes closed and a slight smile on his lips. He is shirtless, revealing his chest, and his hair is tousled and curly. The background is dark and out of focus, with a hint of a window or a curtain visible on the left side. The style of the image is reminiscent of classic black and white photography, with a focus on the subject's facial expression and the texture of his hair. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image.

The Dark Night of the Soul is a period of utter spiritual desolation, disconnection, and emptiness in which one feels totally separated from the Divine. Those who experience the Dark Night feel completely lost, hopeless, and consumed with melancholy. The Dark Night of the Soul can be likened to severe spiritual depression.

>You feel a deep sense of sadness, which often verges on despair (this sadness is often triggered by the state of your life, humanity, and/or the world as a whole)

>You feel an acute sense of unworthiness.

>You have the constant feeling of being lost or “condemned” to a life of suffering or emptiness

>You possess a painful feeling of. powerlessness and hopelessness

>Your will and self-control is weakened, making it difficult for you to act.

>You lack interest and find no joy in things that once excited you.

>You crave for the loss of something intangible; a longing for a distant place or to “return home” again.

I've felt that way my entire life. I'm pretty sure that's called 'being alive'. And I'm not particularly depressed. It's all just nothing. It doesn't get resolved it seems people just rationalize.

[320 / 61]The image is a screenshot of a text document, predominantly in black and white with some red and yellow highlights. The document appears to be a response to a request for information from a person who has been involved in a case of human trafficking. The text is written in English and includes various sections such as a header, a body with a subject line, a body with a response, and a footer.

The header of the document reads "From:" followed by the name "Michael Moore" and the date "August 24, 2019." Below the header, there is a section titled "Subject: RE: Interview Of Perpetrated Human Trafficking Victim" with a date "August 24, 2019" and a time "17:42:24" in the top right corner. The body of the document is divided into two main sections. The first section is titled "Response" and is written in a larger font size than the body text. The second section is titled "Body" and is written in a smaller font size.

The body of the document contains a response to a request for information from a person who has been involved in a case of human trafficking. The response is written in a formal tone and includes a statement about the victim's involvement in the case, a statement about the victim's involvement in the case, and a statement about the victim's involvement in the case. The response also includes a statement about the victim's involvement in the case, a statement about the victim's involvement in the case, and a statement about the victim's involvement in the case.

The footer of the document contains a note that reads "From:" followed by the name "Michael Moore" and the date "August 24, 2019." The note also includes a note that reads "To:" followed by the name "Detective" and the date "August 24, 2019." The note concludes with a note that reads "Response To:" followed by the name "Perpetrated Human Trafficking Victim" and the date "August 24, 2019."

The document is formatted with a header, a body, and a footer, and the text is written in a standard font. The document appears to be a response to a request for information, likely from a law enforcement or investigative agency, regarding a case of human trafficking.

The image is a screenshot of a news article or a social media post. It features a photograph of a man in a suit and a cowboy hat, who appears to be a police officer, standing on a staircase. The man is facing away from the camera, and his back is to the viewer. He is wearing a badge and a hat, and he has a hand on the shoulder of another man who is also facing away from the camera. The other man is wearing a suit and a hat, and he is also facing away from the camera.

The text in the image provides context to the image. It reads: "Donald Trump's spiritual leader, Robert Morris, has just been sentenced to only six months in prison for sexually abusing a 12-year-old girl We are ruled by Pedophiles." The text is in a bold, capitalized font, which stands out against the darker background of the image. The style of the image is a combination of still photography and video, with the man in the suit and cowboy hat appearing to be in motion, as suggested by the blurred background. The overall tone of the image is serious and serious, reflecting the gravity of the situation described in the text.

Thanks for reposting I was just replying to this image but for "some reason" the glowie jannies pruned the ACTIVE thread after 31 replies.

To answer your question, they're engaging in theistic satanism. This is just scratching the surface and Epstein is one of many UG 'pimps' / breeders.

Want to hear more look up Anneke Lucas (credible witness who got thrown into these murder rituals as a 6 yo, got r8pd by Rockefeller amongst many other things)

And also Ted Gunderson, EX FBI Chief turned PI who blew the lid on satanic murder cults with strong governmental connections.

The idea is to give 'thanks' to their 'gods' (the angels who fell, many of whom were the Watchers aka pagan gods i.e Zeus, Odin, etc..) in return for special powers. Whether it works or not idk, but try gooning out to some depraved pronography and tell me, do you feel enlightened?

Humans on Earth get power and demons inside them during thieves rituals that will take over their bodies on judgement day. Probably already possess them and perhaps even transform into them during the most secret of rituals sorta like how when Chris Brown exposed his hand in that slam dunk video. The demons get to use the rituals to attack God directly since all people are connected to God by default and using those negative and depraved emotions/actions empowers them.

The frog's eyes are closed, and its mouth is slightly open, giving it a somewhat surprised or contemplative expression. The character's skin tone is a vibrant green, and the eyes are outlined in black, which contrasts with the green of the skin. The character's facial features are exaggerated, with large, expressive eyes and a wide, open mouth. The background of the image is a blurred, multicolored pattern that does not provide any additional context or information about the character. The image does not contain any text or other discernible details. The style of the image is cartoonish and seems to be designed for a playful or humorous context.

He without innate spiritual powers requires technologies, means and methods to try and concentrate and amplify powers from elsewhere.

Some use herbs and food offerings as a sacrifice, others use people offerings.

The principle is the same: "I give an entity something and the entity gives me his strength".

It's a red herring.

The truth is that spiritual power is cultivated within yourself, and when you have some, you can use it and express it.

And ironically, because these evil people use evil means of destruction to try and manifest spiritual influence in the material world, the only effect they could possibly achieve is destruction and thus they will never actually be in charge or rule anything.

It's simple black magic called vampirism. The more you give your energy and attention to these things (a.k.a. unsolicited worship), the more they loosh you and the more power you give to them. It's by design that they do these not only to black mail people, but also to harvest energy when secret rituals do come out in public. It's a way for them to make sure that whatever happens, they could benefit off of it.

Calling them disgusting, vile, inhuman, bla bla, etc. is exactly what they want from you, they have bots parroting that shit all over the place

You must resist the temptation to react strongly and instead distract yourself with something positive

Don't let them lower your vibration

You might think I'm trying to downplay this, but whatever they put out there has already happened, and there are far worse in store

You're only digging yourself in a ditch going insane over it

The battle for your sanity over this is part of the real spiritual battle, also physical to some extent

The image is a black and white photograph with a collage-like layout. At the top, there is a text that reads "Isn't it interesting that Avicii, Chester Bennington, Anthony Bourdain, & Chris Cornell all committed suicide while w/coking on a documentary called THE SILENT CHILDREN about widespread pedophilia/trafficking...". Below this text, there are four individual photographs arranged in a square grid. Each photo features a different individual with a neutral expression. The individual on the top left is wearing a black cap and a black t-shirt, with a serious expression. The individual on the top right is holding a drink in a glass, and appears to be looking directly at the camera. The individual on the bottom left is wearing a black t-shirt and a baseball cap, with a neutral expression. The individual on the bottom right is wearing a white t-shirt and has a serious expression. The background of the image is plain and does not contain any additional text or graphics.

he is. the US gov readily took in all the nazi scientists after they lost the war and now they're rubbing elbows with jews all of a sudden the deeper the rabbit hole you go to, the more you'll realize that all political or ideological systems are psyops/experiments on how to mass control the population that the deep state have planned out even long before the US was established as a country, it's why almost all countries literally have almost the same structure when it comes to government what they want is for you to be willingly subservient whether in dictatorship, democracy or otherwise the capitalist elites were all literally having parties with communist elites behind the scenes, whatever ensured the cash flow or control.

you already know the US is run by a uniparty deep state, but the bigger pill to swallow is that the same people also run most places in the world despite them looking like diametrical oppositions remember when the whole age verification censorship thing happened all at once being pushed by lobbyists, activists, and governments from all around the world all at the same time? yeah, it's too obvious now since they're desperate and behind on schedule (agenda 2020 forced vax didn't work, neither did project 2025, so now they're pushing the 2030 meme)

The top right photo shows a group of people gathered in front of a stone wall. The individuals are dressed in formal attire, with some wearing hats and others wearing suits. They are holding flags and banners, and some are gesturing with their hands. The bottom left photo features a man in a dark suit and tie, who is smiling and waving. He is surrounded by a group of soldiers, some of whom are holding rifles. The man is wearing sunglasses and has a beard.

In the center of the image, there is a speech bubble that reads "It's okay I'm Jewish."

The text is in white against a black background, and the bubble is slightly tilted.

The style of the image is humorous, combining elements of political commentary with a light-hearted tone. The collage seems to be a commentary on the juxtaposition of political figures and the Jewish community.

The image is a collage of four distinct elements, each with its own visual style and content. On the left, there is a large, ornate cross with a red and gold color scheme, featuring a central emblem with a crown and a shield. Above the cross, the text "RECEIVED AND ACCEPTED SCOTLAND" is written in bold, black letters.

In the center, there is a circular emblem with a black background and a gold border. The emblem features a stylized eagle with outstretched wings and a crown, surrounded by a red and gold border. Above the eagle, the text "SCOTLAND" is written in gold letters.

On the right, there is a section of a scroll with Hebrew text. The scroll is framed by a golden border and has a red and gold design. The text on the scroll is not fully legible due to the resolution of the image.

The background of the image is a collage of various elements, including a blue and red flag with a white cross, a golden eagle, and a golden crown, as well as a section of a stone relief with figures and symbols. The overall style of the image is eclectic, combining elements of heraldry, art, and historical artifacts.

The image is a collage of three distinct elements, each with a central focus on a figure.

The figure appears to be a man in a military uniform, with a mustache and a goatee. He is wearing a dark-colored coat with a white star on the left sleeve and a black and white striped pattern on the right sleeve. The man is holding his right hand in a fist, with his left hand resting on his hip.

The bottom element is a photograph of the man's hand, which is visible in the red circle.

The hand is wearing a ring on the ring finger of the left hand.

The text is in a bold, capitalized font and is placed at the top of the image. The overall style of the image is a satirical or humorous representation, combining elements of historical context with a satirical twist.

Going by the histories of the people that do them, they seem to be successful. Like it's always fantastically wealthy billionaire elites that make up these blood sex and sacrifice cults. Maybe sacrificing orphans to Baal does yield some real measurable results?

You never hear about a trailer park of broke assholes in Alabama or tribal natives in some desert forming up Baal cults. It's super wealthy elites every damn time. So what's going on here where sacrificing illegitimate hooker children to Levant fire gods somehow leads to massive monetary success?

The image is a digital graphic with a predominantly red and white color scheme. At the top, there is a title in bold red text that reads "EPTEN ABORTIONS." Below the title, there is a list of numbered items, each accompanied by a red circle and a red line, which likely represent a list or a sequence of steps. The text within the circles and lines is in a bold, sans-serif font, and the text within the red circles is in a smaller, serif font. The main body of the image features a cartoon-like illustration of a person's face with a red and white color palette. The person appears to be in a state of distress, with their eyes tightly closed and their mouth open as if they are crying. The person's face is detailed with a red and white color scheme, and the person's hair is depicted in a similar style.

At the bottom of the image, there is a question in red text that reads "WHY DIDN'T I CLOSE MY EYES?" The text is in a smaller, sans-serif font. Below the question, there is a response in red text that reads "I don't know, I just don't know." The text is in a smaller, sans-serif font.

The overall style of the image is reminiscent of a meme or a social media post, with a focus on conveying a message through visual elements and text. The use of red and white colors is a common color scheme for emotional or intense content, and the cartoon-like illustration of the person's face adds a playful and relatable element to the message.

In Hebrew, malakh (מַלְאֲכַּי) means "messenger" and is the word for both human and divine messengers, or angels. A malakh is fundamentally an agent that carries out a task, acting as an intermediary between heaven and earth. The term can be applied to divine beings who deliver messages from God, but in the Hebrew Bible, it is used for human messengers more than a hundred times as well.

Melech (מֶלֶךְ) is a Hebrew word that means "king". Which can refer to an earthly ruler, the title for God

/x/ is such a strange board. Vast mountains of noise permeate it, it never stops, it never stops vibrating, maybe the reason for that is the very nature of the topic of the board, and maybe, I like to think that at least, that is its biggest strength, a perk that makes it so this place can retain some small, even if puny, light of knowledge; perhaps I think this to comfort me, to think all of the time spent here has led me somewhere, but I truly believe it did, something lies beneath the surface, something hidden and enormous, monstrous in size, gargantuan in transcendence. Why do I say all of this in an Epstein thread? Again, maybe honoring the noise, the psychotic noise that doesn't stop, the apophenia everyone on here appears to have. This thread is a microcosm of the whole of the board (you can extrapolate to your favorite boards if you want or to everything really), with a bit subtlety you can see it. The problem maybe is how to discern the shards of "truth" the lakes of it at least. You have anons stirring the pot, saying that reptilians satanist are nonsensical, others pointing that those that decry the supposed black magick are glowies, others that those decrying the decrying are the glowies derailing a "very real" series of phenomena" by mixing "fantasy elements" with it. Again, a bunch of noise, but this is why the schizo, the trained one at least, is immune to some propaganda efforts, the noise upped to the max makes one go insane, but if one learns to discern, then one can see it, there it is laying in plain sight maybe some anon can see it, not you though.

The real issue is that "the people" have never been less powerful than these here times. Physically, mentally, spiritually, technologically, financially..etc. Everybody is living off their nanny (i.e the state) and holding out their hands to be held and directed toward wherever it is that they want to go. You cannot kill the faceless nameless under a surveillance machine that monitors your every thought and knows everything about your body and how to keep it sedated.

But still, they will collapse sooner or later. It just won't come from a people's revolt.

They'll get rammed down by fate itself, because that's what always happens. The real fight for now is trying to uphold goodness in your immediate surroundings. If you can't even do that then how are you going to take down this machine? If there's one thing the postmodern commies were right about, it's characterizing the system as a machine.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a circular diagram with a concentric pattern of colors and symbols. At the center of the circle, there is a quote in Latin, which reads: "At immeasurable distance standeth one single Star in the zenith. This is the one god of this one man. This is his world, his pheromone, his divinity. In this world is man Abracas, the creator and the destroyer of his own world. This Star is the god and the goal of man. This is his one guiding god."

The text is overlaid on the image, with the quote being the most prominent feature. The background of the image is white, and the text is in black, making the quote stand out against the white background. The style of the image is reminiscent of a traditional astrological or cosmological illustration, with the use of concentric circles and symbols often associated with the zodiac or the universe. The image is framed by a red border at the top and bottom, and there is a watermark in the bottom left corner that reads "©Jung Carl Gustav, Jung."

Wrong, the ones you call "watchers" were noble , they were the apkallu, our teachers...

The one you call "god", is actually satan, Set is Satan, YHWH is Set, it is a satanic jewish inversion, abrahamism is satanic, that is the true revelation, judaism is satanism. Nimrod = Hero Magi-King

It'd be one thing if people could feign ignorance, but now this information is out in the open for everyone to see, and people are acting like they don't care. Some of these people are parents themselves. I couldn't imagine the idea of my child potentially ending up on that godforsaken island and not wanting mob justice on behalf of someone else's kid. nothing that needs to be attributed to the supernatural when you factor in how strong in-group secrecy and control of power is, especially the kind of ritual, ceremony and repitition over centuries that would produce predictable results.

The part that makes me think supernatural is the obsession with Saturn, anyone can go in a room and kill a kid in the name of Baal, but being obsessed with a celestial body hundreds of million of miles away is the outlier in what would just be normal human nepotism and religion

The image is a painting that depicts a figure seated in a regal pose. The figure is wearing a golden robe with a high collar and a crown on its head, suggesting a royal or divine status. The robe is draped over the figure's body, and the figure's hands are placed on its lap, which is a common gesture in classical art to represent a moment of contemplation or rest. The figure's face is turned slightly to the left, and the expression is serious, with a slight frown, which could indicate a moment of deep thought or contemplation.

The background of the painting is a deep red, which contrasts with the golden robe and adds a sense of richness and depth to the scene. The figure is positioned against a red curtain, which further enhances the dramatic effect of the painting. The overall style of the painting is realistic with a focus on the details of the clothing and the posture of the figure. The use of color and the composition create a sense of drama and importance to the subject matter.

the self deluded rich people adopt a belief that they're inherently better than other people which leads them to justify their mistreatment of other human beings

it's boredom combined with utter lack of humanity which is ironically named seeing as the rich across the globe all suffer from this delusion of superiority to some degree even if all they've done to achieve their success is fall upwards the nepotism ladder and being a catered class from the start

Alternatively I may be wrong with the assumption that this is the work of military intelligence and the targeted individuals who point the finger at the supernatural may actually be right. Doubtful.

Most likely scenario is that exaggerated hog shit was intermixed with actual evidence to confuse and damage the credibility of the real stuff.

Below the header, there is a message that says "Sent: Sunday, March 24, 2013 08:54 AM To: Farkas, Andrew L. Subject: April 4, dinner with chud at my house? Invite." The text is in a standard font, and the message is enclosed in a rectangular box.

In the center of the image, there is a red circle with a white border. Inside the circle, the word "chud" is written in white capital letters. The red circle is highlighted by a red arrow pointing to it. The text within the circle is not fully visible, but it appears to be a question

The overall style of the image is simple and straightforward, with a focus on the text message. The use of a red circle with a white border draws attention to the word "chud," indicating that it is the subject of the message. The red arrow pointing to the circle adds a visual element to the message, suggesting that the word "chud" is the main subject of the message.

Fake and gay. Epstein is an invert, like the rest of them.

The oligarchy are an invert sex cult (elite gender inversion is what the interwebs have been calling it). It's all fake and gay, everything you see in the media is fake

Butler PA: fake and gay

Charlie Kirk: fake and gay

Renee Good: fake and gay

Pretti "shooting": fake and gay

JFK? Fake and Gay.

Nukes: super fake and gay

Look at the First "Lady's" and it's obvious, what's less obvious (do to decades of testosterone use) is that all the "men" are inverted as well, but look at their rounded skulls, sloped shoulders, close-set features, and in-line footfall gait. Female skeletons. They are all inverts, just like Melania, Big Mike, Barb etc ad infinitum Inversion is what Carpenter was referencing in They Live. Freemasonry, like Jews, like Templars etc are deliberate astroturfed red-herrings, game theory it out: why would They have publicly identifiable allegiance?

But They do exist, and They are an active, malicious cabal, so how does it actually work?

Elite Gender Inversion is not Baal or Saturn or Satan worship (tho They probably worship all of these false gods), it is the means by which They stay biologically distinct and separate from Us and maintain Their information asymmetry through collusion.

They form a distinct separate superorganism that's been parasiting from Us (the human superorganism) for at least 300 years. Information and game theory preclude the oligarchy being a rigid hierarchical structure, it must be an organic system or it would fail to organize effectively, EGI is that organic structure.

Open your eyes, see the theatre and you will no longer fall for Their lies.

The character on the left is a green frog-like figure with a large, muscular body and a cheerful expression. It is holding a large axe in its right hand and a hammer in its left, suggesting a battle theme. The character on the right is a dark-skinned figure with a shocked expression, appearing to be in pain or distress. It is holding a small object in its hand, which appears to be a small, red object with a label that reads "Philosophy," indicating a philosophical or intellectual battle.

The background of the image is plain white, which contrasts with the colorful characters and makes them stand out. At the top of the image, there is a red text that reads "Fire Blonde," which is likely a play on words or a reference to a character's name. Below this, there is a list of words in a bold, black font that reads "Philosophy Religion Morality Laws Rationality Ideology Thought Words Opinions," suggesting a discussion or debate about these topics.

The overall theme of the image is a metaphorical battle between the "Fire Blonde" character and the "Philosophy Religion Morality Laws Rationality Ideology Thought Words Opinions" character, with the "Fire Blonde" character being the one in a green frog-like form and the "Philosophy Religion Morality Laws Rationality Ideology Thought Words Opinions" character being the dark-skinned figure. The text at the top of the image provides context to the battle, indicating that the characters are engaged in a philosophical or intellectual debate.

Think rationally: Modern historians would claim Man was living like a beast for 300,000 years, does this follow? Would not even middling intelligent humans be capable of building and of modifying their environment? Imagine a world of 200lb flightless crows, would we not expect to see large scale structures? Of course. Yet the mainstream narrative would have you believe H. sapien couldn't outbuild a 10lb eagle for his first 275,000 years. Ludicrous!

Morphological modern humans have existed for 300,000 years, and even H. erectus was making fire, using tools, and using fire to make better tools (proof of inductive reasoning). Yet we are fed the ridiculous story that Man couldn't figure out how to stack rocks until 25,000 years ago, didn't notice that clay became durable when fired until 20,000 years ago, couldn't form a brick until 10,000 years ago. Preposterous!

The reality is that Man has been building for hundreds of thousands of years. That's why all of the old stone buildings worldwide are buried, regardless of altitude; not a "mud flood", time has buried them. They are over 10,000 years old and ancient histories bear this out.

Rome, Athens, China, what do they all have in common? Accreditation of real buildings to mythical figures, and the claim that human civilization is old.

The image is a still from a video, showing a scene with a large, dark, cylindrical structure that appears to be a part of a larger installation or installation art piece. The structure is composed of numerous thin, vertical cylindrical elements that are stacked on top of each other, creating a sense of depth and complexity. The color palette of the image is predominantly dark, with the structure and the background being in shades of black and gray.

In the foreground, there are blurred figures of people, suggesting movement and activity. The people are dressed in what appears to be business attire, indicating a professional or corporate setting. The lighting in the image is dim, with a bluish tint, which casts a soft glow on the structure and the people, enhancing the overall mood of the scene.

In the bottom right corner of the image, there is a timestamp that reads "00:00:08:18," which suggests that the video was recorded or captured at this time. The timestamp is in a non-Latin script, which is not immediately recognizable.

The style of the image is reminiscent of a documentary or a film still, with a focus on the composition and the interplay of light and shadow to create a visually engaging scene.

The image does not contain any discernible text or logos.

The image is a humorous meme divided into two sections, each with a different visual style. On the left side, there is a sepia-toned photograph of a man wearing sunglasses and a white collar, looking directly at the camera. The man has a serious expression and is wearing a suit. Above the photograph, there is a text that reads "OBVIOUSLY KOOL AID WON IRL (R.I.P.)".

At the top of the image, there is a text that reads "WHO WOULD WIN BY COMBAT".

Below this, there is a caption that says "OBVIOUSLY KOOL AID WON IRL (R.I.P.)".

The overall style of the image is a blend of a serious photograph with a cartoonish character, creating a contrast between the serious and light-hearted elements.

Intention guides reality. You don't need a convoluted conditional belief system to understand this.

>"But immortality can be obtained... the legend is always the same. If others have succeeded in conquering death why must we accept it? I know where the immortals live and how to obtain their secret. We too must become wise men.... The elements of chemistry are many, but finite. So are the techniques of enlightenment"

There are many ways to exploit how reality functions because intention guides it. This is the crux of manipulating emotions, time, space, history, society, etc. You can use the same approaches to all of these problems equally.

If you think your method works, it works. These people have a strong investment in a dark tradition that spans thousands of years. They perform evil rites because extreme acts require the actor to totally rationalize their actions within their beliefs. They know it's evil. That's the point. There is 0 room for their actions to be understood as anything but evil; and this confidence makes their intentions more powerful.

The image is a meme consisting of four separate panels, each depicting a different scene with a character and a text overlay. The character in each panel is a statue or sculpture, and the text in each panel is a question posed to the viewer.

In the top left panel, the text reads: "THEY REFUSED TO LET ME SACRIFICE TO HERACLES SO YOU LET THEIR ISLAND BE?"

In the top right panel, the text reads: "SO YOU LET THEIR ISLAND BE?"

In the bottom left panel, the text reads: "THEY REFUSED TO LET ME SACRIFICE TO HERACLES SO YOU LET THEIR ISLAND BE?"

In the bottom right panel, the text reads: "SO YOU LET THEIR ISLAND BE?"

The style of the image is humorous and satirical, as it plays on the idea of sacrifice and the concept of islands. The use of statues and the text references ancient Greek mythology, suggesting a humorous take on the idea of sacrifice and the concept of islands. The meme is likely intended to be humorous and satirical, using the ancient Greek mythological context to make a contemporary joke.

A lot of the "clear your mind" stuff is so others can move in.

If you've ever noticed your internal monologue keep going when you're silent, that's not you. Wouldn't necessarily be demons, could be anything.

Thoughts reverberate off us like ripples on a pond, and sometimes we catch strays; sometimes it's purposeful, by malevolent beings. 4D beings don't operate by our logic. If we were in a cage with 4 walls, we'd be imprisoned in the same way a 2D being would be imprisoned in a circle.

We as 3D beings can put our finger in that circle, and take it out. To a 2D being this would look miraculous, like this strange ever-shifting circle materializing in their cell and then leaving. That's how a 4D being would operate in our reality, except they can "put their finger" inside your head, your body, without ever actually being there.

When you empty yourself enough, you essentially create real estate for some possibly terrible things.

The solar god, the ball in the sky, was worshiped in the form of a masculine bull and a phallus like obelisk. In the cult of Baal in Phoenicia-Canaan and Ugarit Syria (2000 bc), in its twisted dark interpretation turns into child sacrifice to their fertility god (in opposition with Mot, god of death). People were told to offer their first born, sometimes practiced cannibalism (canni-baal-ism).

Baal was the son of Dagon. Father of the gods was El, hence the words el-ite, el-ected, el-ders, chap-el, ang-el, el-ectric, the el-ements, Isra-el. Bull god Moloch was worshiped in Amon. Phoenicians spread the cult of Baal to the New Kingdom of Egypt.

Through the influence of the Aramaeans, who borrowed the Babylonian pronunciation Bel, the god ultimately became known as the Greek Belos, identified with Zeus. Sheitan meant 'adversary'. Hebrews during early stages of Israel had names like Ishbaal or Sherubbaal, baal meant to them the Lord of Israel.

In 900 bc the Baal cult of Jezebel lived in opposition to the cult of Yahweh, in which Baal was condemned as a false god. In Carthago emperors had names like Hanni-bal and worshipped Baal.

In Greece the god Pan represented sexual instincts, the male aspect of earth. Saturn was the god Kronos (father chronological Time), often depicting as eating its children. The Romans worshiped Saturn in the temple of Saturn where the money was kept, associated with the material world 666, materialism. Winter solstice, when Saturn ruled Capricorn, was celebrated as Saturnalia with the Yule goat. May Day was celebrated as Belthane.

In Christianity the horned fertility god Pan became the Devil, epitomy of absolute evil. Winter solstice, Saturnalia turned into Christmas, worship of Old Nick in december St Nicolas, Samhain-Halloween into All saints, feast of Ishtar Easter and Belthane St Walpurgis night. An obelisk is placed at St Peter as the phallus of Baal.

The jews build their Wailing Wall with the chiseling technique of Baalbek. Baal worshippers sacrificed their first born child to bull statues of Baal with a fire in its belly. Moloch was represented as an owl. Other variations were Bel and Baal Zebub (Lord of Flies).

In the bible, based on Sumerian-Babylonian mythology, a jealous god is worshiped as The Lord, and a creation myth is told of a holy bloodline with a good and evil child Abel (=Bael) and Cain (child of Lucifer). The descendant of Cain was Tubalcain. Le Diable=Bael. The tower of Babel=Baal.

In the Book of Kings Elijah (my Goid is Yah) warns king Ahab and his wife Jezebel against worship of Baal.

In paganism the Aryans (Draco-Orion bloodline, in the education system labeled as 'Celts') danced around the maypole as phallus symbol, a celebration of the Sacred Marriage, rebirth of the regenerative powers of the sun and mother earth (and Venus as fertility goddess) on May Day, the Silver Gate.

The cult of Baal continued as Christianity of the Catholic Church who put an Egyptian obelisk at the Lateran obelisk on St Peter Square (St Peter=Jupiter) of St Peter's Basilica. The popes wrote papal bulls. All medieval cities had bell towers in the center of their squares. In Mecca people worshipped Hubal.

The Medici family put an obelisk in their Boboli gardens. Frederick V was emperor of the Palatinate. Guardians of the sacred pole became the policy of politicians and police.

In freemasonry the god was worshipped as Jah-Bul-On. Masons used the password Tubalcain (phallus symbol, two balls and a cane, 007).

Baal and Judy represent male and female component of the Dark Side.

Moloch is an epithet meaning 'king', used by the Saturn cult in Canaan for the God program, mentioned in the Book of Leviticus in the Bible. It was worshipped as a bull headed god through sacrifice with fire. Its cult, similar to the cult of Baal-Hadad, continued through obelisks (phallus of Baal) in Egyptian religion, paganism, Christianity, Satanism, freemasonry and modern pop culture.

The worship of Baal is a inversion of sun worship, the Divine Masculine, the ball in the sky, represented by a masculine bull and worship of the world axis, the sacred pole with constellation Draco on top (one eye-ball).

Children were sacrificed in the valley of Gehenna, where perpetual fire was lit (later the concept of Hell in Christianity, eternal flame or torch symbol) and in Carthage, founded by Phoenician colonists. The smoke from sacrifice=holy smoke Shekina. In the Book of Kings Solomon is described as having introduced sacrifice to Moloch. In Greece Saturn was Chronos eating his own children.

Hebrew letter shin (three pronged fork symbol): fire, Tarot card Judgement-Aeon, regeneration.

The bull of Taurus is worshiped on May Day and the 13 days leading up to 1 may. The Saturn cult is a cult of pedophilia, it uses children as energy source.

1730 During the Atlantic slave trade, King George II (House of Hannover) creates a slave market at Wall Street (wall=also symbol of Saturn, planet of restriction and control) as modern bull worship.

My honest guess is that mixing ancient rituals with sex just increases the potency of effects.

Something alongside Alister Crowley stuff that sexual intercourse is a spiritual shortcut. I think that material possibilities are endless their goals were purely manifestation based.

They were all very successful people and participation certainly opened them up to the world of endless possibilities without moral burden.

Main ego driven "intellectual" goal is to feel like a god. Rituals like reproducing the myth of Osiris and Isis where you brainwash a person through torture and rape into complete obedience.

You drench yourself in the image of you being personification of the worst evil that tortures innocent person into obedience and suddenly the person you tortured gratifies you with unconditional love.

Pure ecstasy then you crush and kill them like some kind of god?

My question would be what about spirituality and transcendence of material world - what happens to the ego?

Those people need to have deeply rooted belief of superiority to their victims but it puzzles me how this belief didn't crack? All of them must have been absolute psychopaths but how did they manage to operate to filter out if participant is psychopathic enough to handle it.

Very hard stuff because they literally are unable to put themselves in another person's skin (figuratively) (((but literally figured it out)))

Reading the emails it makes me think that they are literally morons and ritual junkies.

Jeffrey is a case study on Dunning-Kruger effect not only when it comes to finance but the whole spirituality thing.

Like the only support they have is the egotistical human connection between each other that legitimises what they do.

So the main problem is that there are rituals there are stories but we have very little explanation of the effects.

You can read all you want about this stuff but there are very little answers.

Unlike eastern spiritual practices deriving from Buddha, Zarathustra, Krishna etc there is plenty of rituals, mantras that guide you to finding inner self, the true nature of the mind. There are stages, steps, goals - pretty well documented stuff. I'd add Jesus Christ but I think lots of his teachings are lost to the Church which leans more in to Exterior.

So I think there can be derived a spiritual spectrum left to right - External to Internal - Materialistic to Transcendent.

Left would be Jeffrey and his crew I overdrive with rituals and ecstasy then probably ancient Idolatry, new Judaism(monotheistic), old Judaism preemperial (polytheistic), Hinduism, Roman Catholicism, Zoroastrianism, Buddha, and lastly some monk sitting in a cave Sokushinbutsuing himself to death.

The image is a screenshot of a text message exchange between two individuals. The text is in a mix of English and what appears to be a non-English script. The sender's email address is "jevacation@gmail.com" and the recipient's email address is "jevacation@gmail.com". The text is written in a casual, conversational tone, and it seems to be a response to a previous email sent by the sender.

The text is divided into two main sections. The first section is a block of text in English, which is a note from Bob Pine. The note is about a secret society and mentions that there are 12 members of this society. The text is followed by a note from the recipient, which is a humorous response to the note from Bob Pine. The recipient's note is in a different script, which is not clearly readable.

The second section of the text is a block of text in a different script, which is not clearly readable. The text appears to be a continuation of the conversation between the sender and the recipient, but it is not fully legible.

The overall tone of the text suggests a friendly and informal exchange between the two individuals, with the recipient's note adding a humorous element to the conversation.

The text is not in a standard format, which may indicate that it is a screenshot from a messaging application or a similar platform.

These entities are keen to give people ignorant of the afterlife little treats to keep them under their thumb. They use these people like tools to propagate suffering and sin in the world. The part they never tell you is, the special treatment ceases when you die. These worshippers of dark forces end up abandoned by them after death.

The image is a simple, black and white line drawing with a cartoonish style. It features a character that appears to be a humanoid figure with a large nose, a small mouth, and a text is clearly visible.

In the character's hand, there is a small, rectangular object that resembles a cube or block. The character is holding the object with one hand, and it appears to be in the process of opening or closing the cube. The character's other hand is resting on the cube, suggesting a gesture of opening or closing it.

The background of the image is plain white, which contrasts with the black outlines of the character and the cube, making them stand out. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of a meme or a satirical illustration, often used to convey a humorous or ironic message.

"Man bites dog" could also answer what you're thinking of.

A moralistic society would most likely implicitly assume that their leadership was also moral unless proven otherwise. This is why it makes so many headlines when a high-ranking official or powerful leader is involved in heinous crimes of debauchery; it's because someone so successful is "supposed to be a moral, just, beacon of society." That is the conditioning for which the masses are kept placated with leadership even when they make EXTREMELY bad decisions that negatively impact them.

And now people realize (en masse) that not only are their leaders sadist monsters BUT that they are also destroying the country they govern. Soon, you'll see a lot of people very, very upset with nearly ANY decision coming from political leaders because they now no longer trust anyone above them that they are doing their job to represent properly.

On the right side of the image, there is a black and white photograph of a man wearing a traditional Japanese helmet with a black ribbon attached to it. The man is looking directly at the camera with a serious expression. The text overlay on the right side of the image reads, "Make me a coffee - Mata a McAfee? OK."

The style of the image is humorous, combining elements of a serious conversation with a playful and ironic twist. The use of the phrase "Make me a coffee" is a play on the phrase "Make me a coffee" from the popular TV show "The Office," which is a reference to the character Michael Scott. The image is a screenshot of a news article from June 26, 2021, titled "Israel sends IDF team to Florida to assist with tower collapse rescue efforts." The article is written in English and is presented in a typical newspaper layout with a large image of a collapsed building on the left side and a smaller image of a group of people on the right side. The text is in a bold, sans-serif font and is divided into two columns.

The main headline is in a larger font size than the rest of the text, drawing attention to the main subject of the article. Below the headline, there is a subheading that reads "Home Front Command delegation of 10 reservists flies to Miami: Israel's United HaTzilaah sends psychological assistance team. Bennett speaks to governor and offers help." This subheading provides additional context about the event and the involvement of the United HaTzilaah.

The image shows a scene of destruction and rescue, with a group of people in uniform standing amidst rubble, suggesting a rescue operation. The rubble is scattered across the ground, and the sky is visible in the background, indicating the aftermath of a disaster. The image is taken from a distance, providing a wide view of the scene but not allowing for detailed observation of the individuals or the specific details of the rubble.

The image is a photograph, and the quality is not high, with some pixelation and blurriness visible. The colors are muted, and the lighting is even, which gives the image a somber and serious tone. The style of the image is realistic, capturing the aftermath of a disaster in a way that is both informative and visually impactful.

The tone of the conversation is serious and critical, with the use of words like "threat," "hosting," and "hosting an organization which will always crop up along side humanity, a deep state / secret cult / illuminati." The text also includes references to popular culture, such as "highly sought after game," and the idea of working together for a good story, with a mention of a "memorable villain." cannibal(n.)

>"human that eats human flesh," 1550s, from Spanish canibal, caribal "a savage, cannibal," from Caniba, Christopher Columbus' rendition of the Caribs' name for themselves (often given in modern transliterations as kalino or karina; see Carib, and compare Caliban).

>"a choice or select body, the best part," 1823, from French élite "selection, choice," from Old French eslite (12c.), fem. past participle of elire, elisre "pick out, choose," from Latin eligere "choose" (see election). Borrowed in Middle English as "chosen person" (late 14c.), especially a bishop-elect, but it died out mid-15c. The word was re-introduced by Byron's "Don Juan." As an adjective by 1852. As a typeface, recorded by 1920.

>1640s, first used in English by physician Sir Thomas Browne (1605-1682), apparently coined as Modern Latin electricus (literally "resembling amber") by English physicist William Gilbert (1540-1603) in treatise "De Magnete" (1600), from Latin electrum "amber," from Greek ēlektron "amber" (Homer, Hesiod, Herodotus), also "pale gold" (a compound of 1 part silver to 4 of gold); which is of unknown origin.

Look up the rest of them, the ONLY word in your list that derives from "El" is "Israel."

also you're conflating two very different deities, Ba'al Hammon (Carthage's name for Kronos/Saturn, received human sacrifice) and Ba'al Hadad (Canaanite deity, defeated Yam, worshippers genocided by the Hebrews, did NOT receive human sacrifice). "Ba'al" is an honorific, not a name, it simply means "Lord".

Moloch is misunderstood like many pagan rituals were sacrifices were made on livings. Those a reminder most of the population couldn't read back then so the only way to teach were story and dance, those things gave rituals.

Moloch asked for the sacrifice of the first born of Man and not about a first child from man. The first word of Genesis 1:1 is bereshit with the letter Aleph in front give Abereshit : the firstborn. What Moloch asked is to sacrifice you to him, your firstborn, is yourself, your self or what we call : Ego.

Ba-el simply means God Teach the spiritual inside way, it's came from Egypt, where they believed the afterlife was in the sky, the sky inside the skull. And this what it was called later on Hades by greeks and Hell by the roman church because this is the place where you are purified of your sins by receiving the God fire. (purgatory.)

The content of the letter is not fully visible due to the image resolution, but it appears to be a personal communication between the sender and the recipient. The letter seems to be discussing a personal matter, possibly related to the sender's work or personal life, as indicated by the mention of "muffy" and "good candidate" in the second letter. The sender expresses a desire to meet the recipient and mentions that the recipient is a "good candidate for the position". The letter also includes a request for the recipient to "write back" and a request for the recipient to "get in touch" with the sender.

The image does not provide any additional context or information beyond the text of the letter. The style of the letter, the content, and the date suggest that it is a personal communication, possibly a work-related or personal matter.

I don't know for 100% how much it's all theatrics or not (how much of the in-fighting between the different elite factions is real), but it's clear there is at least 1 faction that wants Trump to be in power right now, and the others more or less seem to respect that decision, for whatever reason

There are functional rituals left in this reality.

Meaning, there are actions you can take, that have, by physics standards, non-sensical results.

The problem with these types of "rituals", is that they are symbolic, fleeting, and granular control is intent limited.

So, one way to disable the results/intended effects of a ritual, is to merely discuss it.

Then the ritual becomes powerless, and whatever exploit it was being used for, stops working.

An additional query of the ritual, in the collective consciousness, removes the radical outlier result capability.

So yes. There are "random" things you can perform in this reality, that lead to results of your intent.

The problem is that they are one shot exploits, low hanging fruit in the reality of life as you know it. The moment they become known by a large enough group of observers, or an observer with a high enough influence field rate, they are disabled.

That which created this existence as you know it, left many management channels, and Easter eggs.

Double slit

You wake up on a rock flying through space one day, for no particular reason. You are a primate, for no particular reason.

The truth about this reality, is that everything you know, is just two people having a conversation.

You're one of the people.

Who is the other?

A human's knee jerk answer is God, or everything, or the self yet again.

A BEN man's answer is that existence is the conversation between each conscious observer's internal monologue, and the unknown cockpit.

When analyzed as a system, there is nothing else going on here.

Each observer has a limited scope of channel input bandwidth, and somehow, seemingly infinite amounts of data can be "discussed".

How can limited observers, experience an unlimited Universe?

Asymmetry doesn't have frayed ends.

What is the unknown cockpit?

The idea that if you strip away all concepts of reality as you know them, and only indulge the momentary data table of what you are receiving internally, from the Universe around you.

Suddenly, you aren't a human, you're a thinking being, that is currently wearing a human suit, this applies specific data channels.

Your total bandwidth capability of interaction with reality around you, is the limit of human neural capability, seemingly.

Only your own personal acceptance of the story of life, unfolding in front of you, is the reconciliation of each separate data channel into your experience of reality.

In truth, we can't really bind the sensory data together as a cohesive "movie" from a lowest axiom perspective. It happens in situ for each observer, in each of their unknown cockpits.

BEN men are human, training to pilot a human, but not as a human.

Train to utilize all neural pathways, of the human body.

Be prepared to use these pathways, as whatever you may be, human or not.

BEN men are ready for anything.

My understanding of the situation is that the accuser's accusations weren't taken seriously at first. And when they finally were, the FBI was real quick to bust Epstein and Maxwell. But once they were sure they had enough to make the charges stick and put the two of them away for a long time, they didn't delve much deeper. I don't know if that's just how these sorts of things are usually, with a "We've got enough to lock them up. Good job, let's go home." or if they were being pressured by the rich and powerful to stop. A few other people like the billionaire Leon Black got charged, but were able to slide by with minimal punishment. He for example paid the government $62.5 million in a plea deal for having received "legitimate financial services" from Epstein and therefore unknowingly funded his illicit "business" in exchange for immunity from any other Epstein related crimes. No money went to victims. Looks like a legalized bribe imho.

After Epstein died, there was a lot of public interest in the case, but the government through multiple administrations delayed and delayed to release anything. Now they're releasing lots of files (but not all, and with many redactions). But now it's been decades since the crimes were committed. Epstein's most heinous shit was done in the 80s and 90s. Physical evidence is lost and a lot of Epstein's accomplices and victims are dead or staying low. 22 people associated with his "business" have died along with a number of victims, suspicious in itself, but not helpful for investigation. And Epstein himself is of course dead.

Sucks that so many rich and powerful people are just going to get away with some of the worst crimes imaginable, but from what I've seen the DoJ's decision to not open up any more cases is probably the right one. I don't think anything in the files would be enough to convict at this point. Maybe if the investigation and prosecutions had been more aggressive earlier more could've been done. Evil won.

The image is a text excerpt from a document or article, likely a scholarly or academic paper, given the formal language and the context of discussing the nature of torture. The text is in English and is divided into paragraphs, with the first paragraph beginning with "Despite its obvious similarity to state-sponsored torture," and the last paragraph ending with "The sexual nature of these acts shows that the perpetrators are not merely criminals but also victims of their own victimization."

The text discusses the concept of pornography and its role in the perpetration of torture. It mentions that the act of pornography is often described as a form of torture, and that the act of viewing pornography is often seen as a form of sexual humiliation. The text also references the United States and German-sponsored torture, indicating a discussion of international perspectives on the subject.

The text is written in a formal and academic style, with a focus on the psychological and social implications of the act of viewing pornography. The text is dense with information, and the use of terms like "state-sponsored torture," "pornography," and "sexual humiliation" suggests a discussion of a complex and sensitive topic. The text is likely from a scholarly article or a research paper, as it contains a mix of academic language and references to specific works or theories.

Torture also works as a bonding exercise. So the torturers get closer to each other and their gods emotionally and spiritually. Sharing and reminiscing also causes the bonding mechanisms. That's why I think they put it in our faces. As a way to bond publicly while getting paid, at least in Hollywood. Business people who participate, I doubt they brag to the masses as brazenly as hollywood. There is also a spirit corruption that spreads. There is the 100 monkey effect. So if enough instances of something like frazzledrip happen it becomes inbedded into the collective unconscience.

Here's the real deal. They bring a form of "luck." But not really luck, because they are a poison pill. You will attain success in this world, but if you read through these emails, both Ghisene and Epstein seemed to be burned out and sad. Satan always extracts a greater price than he pays out. Why does Satan encourage this? Because we are made in God's image and Satan wishes to defile that image. Satan wants nothing more than to destroy humanity (God's creation) and put humanity under his thumb. Your only goal in well sure, and also blackmail, multidimensional

torture can also bond the tortured to their tormentor. Hell, I know this well, my fucking cluster B psycho wife plays these game literally every waking moment (lot of women do this though at less intensity) -- induce a trauma, heal together from trauma. If you "see" the game and emotionally self-contained enough to heal on your own then you are far more immune. if you let the manipulator torture you into an emotionally vulnerable state, then be the one to "rescue" you, this becomes quite similar to stockholm syndrome, it may trigger a very strong bond, this is what we see in many toxic relationships. I can imagine Epstein with literally decades of experience manipulating 14 year old girls and such... probably was an expert on molding them into the image of his design and causing them to imprint upon him.

Light vs dark. These scum have sided with dark. Their rituals reflect that, they are for the purpose of symbolic or archetypal warfare which is what spiritual warfare mainly consists of. They use blacks and Indians for their goals because they're dark. They flood the world with Indians because they are dark skinned and this imprints psychically and archetypally as “dark taking over”

The black porn they promoted is one facet. That piper perri thing was their doing to instill more archetypal damage to the population. They don't actually care about race but that the races represent light and dark archetypes. Which is why they hate whites so much and have a weird obsession with dark skinned races. This is an archetype war remember that. In ops image why did they use black males for that? Because they are dark skinned and represent dark and they want to hurt the light. The actual dudes themselves in that were probably just paid servants or slaves. They don't love black people. Blacks are just their tools for their archetypal evil doings.

All of it from the head boss of darkness who contests with god over the light. But man has free will and the game is to persuade to your side through manipulation of belief.

Darkness seeks to win. They flood the world with Indians to imprint a sense of darkness taking over. They use blacks for their sexual based propaganda for the same purpose. They want you to believe darkness is winning so that you can bring it about for them.

Choose light. Do not listen or fall for their tricks. Look inside yourself and ask yourself how light can win.

Darkness can be defeated don't believe them. In fact it's a whole lot easier to do than you realize and they the dark are terrified of people realizing this.

The image is a screenshot of a text message conversation. The conversation appears to be between two individuals, with the text in a mix of English and what appears to be a non-English script. The conversation is about a person who has changed their email account and password, and is now using a Google account. The person suggests that they would like to collaborate with the other person, but they are not sure if they can trust them. The person is also concerned about the security of their email account and password.

The text is in a mix of English and what appears to be a non-English script. The non-English script is not fully legible, but it seems to be a continuation of the English text. The text is in a standard font, and the conversation is structured with a header and a footer, which is common in text messages. The text is in a conversational tone, and the person is expressing their concerns and intentions.

>Epstein bought part of the black cloth that covers the kaaba (muzzie magic cube) in Mecca

It's more than just a muslim magic cube. The significance of the kaaba predates Islam and that site was revered for millennia before islam. It also contains pieces of a meteorite and was rebuilt a few hundred years ago after a flood (because that happens often in Mecca) and it was aligned with the solstices. The present site is about as occult as it gets and no one ever questions it. Epstein probably used the cloth in some kind of ritual.

It's pretty clear to me. Our world was designed for us to inhabit and we were designed to have no understanding of our purpose or why we are here. God, whatever that is, designed everything in the material world and if you are to stand in opposition to any of the order placed here for us, you are in opposition to God. Satan, exists in opposition to God and has a vested interest in opposing this order. So, if you fuck with metaphysics and fuck with manifestation and the like, you are ultimately fucking with the most powerful being in our universe and it won't end well.

No you see nazism becomes bad when it favors whiteys, that's no-no, you can't have an ethnicity rebel against merchants. So clearly it's evidence that they originally were not against it, and only became antis when Hitler deviated from their original plan. Napoleon is said to have done something similar too.

He is in mid-stride, running on the court with his left hand on his hip and his right hand on his hip. The player's right foot is slightly ahead of his left, suggesting movement. The background is blurred, indicating the focus is on the player.

In the bottom right corner of the image, there are three icons: a thumbs-up, a thumbs-down, and a dislike symbol. These icons are commonly used to indicate the viewer's reaction to the content. The thumbs-up icon is associated with positive feedback, the thumbs-down with negative feedback, and the dislike symbol with disapproval. The thumbs-up and thumbs-down icons are typically used to indicate agreement or disagreement with the content, while the dislike symbol is used to express disapproval.

The image is taken from a side angle, which is common in sports videos to show the player's movement and to provide a clear view of the court. The player's posture and the blurred background suggest that the focus is on the player's performance, possibly during a game or practice. The image does not contain any text that provides additional context or information.

It seems more like the Rothschilds saw this young man who would be a revolutionary and thought they could use him to further their goals. I.e, they thought he'd be another Lenin or Stalin who would usher in another Jewish Bolshevik revolution, this time in Germany. Only, he saw right through their bullshit and used their money and support to get to a position of power and then rally against them. If you follow the rise of the Nazi party it's like a switch flips- one minute they have rich, powerful Jews supporting them then suddenly as if overnight, H-man himself pulls a lever and starts stripping them of power and dismantling their institutions. You can see this happen in real time as suddenly there's a desperate scramble by communist sympathizers in the west to get Europe to view Germany as the bad guys and ignore Stalin and the USSR.

After the war, Churchill, Patton, and a few others realized their mistake and continuously expressed how bad they fucked up by not siding with Germany, only to be killed or forced into what was essentially exile.

Michael A. Aquino Jr. (October 16, 1946 – September 1, 2019) was an American political scientist, military officer and Satanist. He was the founder and high priest of the Temple of Set. Aquino was also a specialist in psychological warfare for military intelligence and an officer in the U.S. Army.

Early life and education

Michael A. Aquino Jr.[1] was born on October 16, 1946.[2] His parents were Michael A. Aquino Sr. and Betty Ford.[1] He was an Eagle Scout graduate of Santa Barbara High School (later serving as a national commander of the Eagle Scout Honor Society)[2] in 1964 before enrolling at the nearby University of California, Santa Barbara,[3] where he received a bachelor's degree in political science[4] as an ROTC United States Army Distinguished Military Graduate (conferring a then-elite Regular Army commission) in 1968. He returned to the institution after transitioning to United States Army Reserve service, earning an M.A. in political science in 1976 and a Ph.D.[2][5]

Career

Following his commissioning in the Army, Aquino served as a psychological warfare specialist and was deployed in the Vietnam War.[6][7] He served with the Green Berets and in the 1970s and early 1980s he was a part-time NATO liaison officer in several European countries. While off-duty on one of these tours, he visited Wewelsburg Castle, which was used by the SS and Heinrich Himmler, and performed a Satanic ritual there.[8][9][10] Aquino stated that his interest in Nazism was academic and denied that he was racist. The journalist Linda Goldston quoted him as saying: "I'm fascinated by the lessons to be learned from the Nazi experience but not blinded by their excesses", and "There was a small group of brutal and desperate men who governed a country through despotism and tyranny. They were quite brilliant in some respects, yet utterly savage in others." [9][11]

Upon receiving his doctorate in 1980, Aquino returned to his native San Francisco, where he served for the next six years as an Active Guard Reserve officer at the Presidio of San Francisco. He also taught at Golden Gate University until 1986.[7] In 1981, Aquino was a reserve attaché at the Defense Intelligence Agency (DIA), and a year later he was a student at the Foreign Service Institute, sponsored by the United States Department of State. As an intelligence officer, he thus gained access to top-secret documents. He later worked as a program analyst at the US Army's Reserve Personnel Center in St. Louis, Missouri, where he was responsible for human resources issues. Prior to entering his doctoral program, he briefly worked at Merrill Lynch and obtained a license to trade securities on the New York Stock Exchange.[8][9] In 1994, Aquino retired from active duty in the army, was honorably transferred to the reserves and awarded the Meritorious Service Medal.

Satanism

Aquino dressed for a demonstration Satanic ritual in 1973

In 1969, he joined the Church of Satan, led by Anton LaVey, and quickly rose through the ranks of the group. By 1971, Aquino had been appointed Magister Caverns of the IV degree within the church hierarchy, was the editor of the publication The Cloven Hoof and sat on the governing council of the nine.[12] His career in Satanism was paused when he went on to work in the military.[4] He met LaVey at a screening of Rosemary's Baby, where LaVey gave him his business card.[13] They grew to be very close.[14] However, conflicts arose over time between LaVey and Aquino regarding the direction of the group. The latter rejected LaVey's atheism and materialism.[12][15][4] When he started selling positions in the Church of Satan for money, Aquino finally left the group in 1975.[16][17] His history of the Church of Satan, entitled The Church of Satan, has had several editions and has been an important source for academics, though how reliable Aquino is has been questioned.[18] He has since extensively criticized LaVey and has, according to scholars, "gone out of his way to make public court documents that reflect negatively on LaVey's personal life".[14][18]

After he left the Church of Satan, he started a ritual in which he asked Satan for advice on what to do next.[19] According to him, Satan appeared to him in the summer of 1975 and revealed to him that he wanted to be called Set, a name that his worshippers in ancient Egypt are said to have used. Aquino produced a religious text, The Book of Coming Forth by Night, which he claimed was revealed to him by Set in a process of automatic writing. The book proclaimed Aquino Magus of the new eon of Set, and heir to LaVey's "infernal mandate". On this basis, he founded the Temple of Set, which is dedicated to the worship of Set. In contrast to LaVey's approach, this group has an occult and hermetic orientation. Aquino's orientation was strongly influenced by the work of the British occultist Aleister Crowley.[20][15] In 1975, the Temple of Set was registered as a non-profit church in California and received state and federal recognition and tax exemption that same year.[21]

Child molestation allegations

As part of the Satanic panic,[22][4] in November 1986, the San Francisco Police began investigating allegations of sexual abuse in connection with the Army's Child Development Center at the Presidio of San Francisco. A girl came forward in August 1987 and identified Aquino as the culprit. At least 58 out of 100 children who had attended the daycare center showed physical and mental signs of sexual abuse, leading to a lawsuit by the parents for $60 million in damages.[8][9][14] An investigation against Aquino was launched, but it was closed after insufficient evidence was found.[23][14][4] Despite this Aquino has become a fixture in some corners of conspiracy theorist communities.[12]

Writer and publisher Mitch Horowitz said that investigators found that in the weeks of the claimed incident the Aquinos were not residing in San Francisco but instead in Washington, D.C., where Aquino was enrolled in a graduate public administration program under the auspices of the Industrial College of the Armed Forces. Although no charges were filed, a continuation board ended Aquino's full-time Active Guard Reserve contract in 1990; while Aquino said that he continued to serve as a decorated (by virtue of his Meritorious Service Medal) part-time space activities officer until his required superannuation under the U.S. Army's up-or-out statutes in 1994, this decision essentially forestalled any subsequent promotion or advancement of his military career. "The Aquinos", Horowitz wrote, "unsuccessfully attempted legal action against the girl's chaplain father and an Army psychiatrist who stoked the false claims. But the couple faced the barrier of gravitating between civilian and military law". Horowitz further wrote that Aquino and wife settled legal actions against two accusatory books out of court.[24]

Aquino sued as the result of two books that implied he was guilty in the case: Painted Black by Carl Raschke and The New Satanists by Linda Blood. Blood was a former member of the Temple of Set; Aquino alleged the book defamed him and the Temple of Set.[17][25] The case was settled out of court.[17]

Death

After a long illness, Aquino died on September 1, 2019 at 72 years of age.[26]

The Finders

Formation c. 1971

Founder Marion Pettie

Dissolved c. 2003

Type Intentional community

Location

Washington, D.C.

Madison County, Virginia

The Finders were an intentional community and new religious movement founded in Washington, D.C. and Virginia in the late 1960s by former United States Air Force master sergeant Marion Pettie. They believed in New Age and eastern religious ideas, particularly Taoism.

The Finders came to wider public attention in 1987 with the arrest of two members for misdemeanor child abuse, leading to accusations that the group was a satanic cult, an international pedophile ring, or a kidnapping ring run by the Central Intelligence Agency.

Background

Marion David Pettie

Marion David Pettie was born in 1920.[1][2] He was an officer in the United States Air Force, attaining the rank of master sergeant and retiring in 1956, after which he did little formal work.[3] According to a 1993 interview of Pettie by U.S. News & World Report, his wife once worked for the Central Intelligence Agency, and his son, George Pettie, worked for Air America, a covert CIA front.[3][4] Pettie referred to himself as "the Stroller."[3]

According to a 1987 Washington Post interview with George Pettie, his father became a "student of the world" during the 1960s and would spend his time in the library near their family farm. He described Marion Pettie as having "a keen sense of what people need that they don't even know themselves." [3] Around 1971, Pettie gathered his followers for a meeting at his house in the Glover Park neighborhood of Washington, D.C., which George Pettie described as "the beginning of a new life" for his father and his followers. "They found in their communal lifestyle a more adventurous life." [3]

As of 1987, George Pettie owned a home inspection business in Northern Virginia and broke contact with his father in 1985.[3]

Properties

The Petties had a 90-acre farm in Nethers, Virginia near Shenandoah National Park on the road to Old Rag Mountain, known as the Pettie Farm or simply The Farm.[3][5] As early as 1968, members of the American counterculture came to The Farm. In 1987, at least four visitors to The Farm between 1968 and 1973 recalled it as a place where "anyone could get an organic meal without charge, without questions." [3] According to a 2021 letter by Virginia author Terry Alford, Pettie was "very welcoming" and surrounded by devoted friends "attracted by his intelligent and questing nature," including anarcho-capitalist Karl Hess.[5] Pettie was also described by visitors as a "charismatic and wealthy man" in his forties.[3]

Pettie and his followers also had a house at 3920 W Street NW in the Glover Park neighborhood of Washington, D.C. The house consisted of two attached red brick buildings, each with four apartments.[1][3] They lived there until 1987 and occasionally distributed flyers advertising shared rooms for as little as $5 per night, according to a temporary resident.[3]

In addition to the farm and house, the group owned a warehouse at 1307 Fourth Street NE, Washington.[3]

Beliefs

The belief systems of the group were kept secret from outsiders.[6][7] The group's beliefs were eclectic and sourced from a variety of traditions; they combined eastern religion, especially Taoism, with New Age and Human Potential Movement concepts.[1][2] Pettie developed his initial views on the works of Carlos Castaneda, who researched mystic self-exploration in the 1960s and had "a consuming interest in the future," leading cult experts to identify futurism as a major component of the Finders' philosophy.[3] In 1996, Pettie described himself as a skeptic, saying that he did not "believe or disbelieve things." [6]

By the 1980s, members tended to be young adults, well-educated, professional, and secretive.[3] According to George Pettie, they tended to be professionals who had dropped out of careers and secured temporary work in Washington D.C.[3] They were opposed to permanent employment as an obstacle to "spontaneity." [7] According to neighbors of the Pettie farm, visitors to the farm began wearing business suits and professional clothing around 1982, replacing the hippie culture which had previously predominated.[3]

Some time before 1987, the group was segregated by sex, with women living at the Glover Park house, while the men moved into the Fourth Street warehouse.[3]

Child rearing

In 1980, the group radically changed their child rearing practices to raise a generation of "toughened" children. To replicate what they believed was the original method of living of Native Americans, the children were raised communally instead of by their parents.[3]

According to George Pettie, the group operated as "an extended family" of people who were "under his father's sway." [3] Members shared parental responsibility for children, in order to allow Pettie to send them on "adventures" to teach them about themselves.[1][2][3] Pettie would identify a character flaw in a member and send them away. On their return, they would describe the "lesson" they learned to other members.[3] During this time, they would not see their biological children for months, and the children would be collectively cared for by other members.[3] The children were not enrolled in school.[3]

Neighbors reported seeing children at both the Madison County farm and the Glover Park home. During the summers, as many as a dozen children lived on the farm, and neighbors reported "hollering and screaming ... about Momma and Daddy." [3] Neighbors to the Glover Park home reported that "the children often went without clothes in the summer" and at least one report was made to police regarding a child who was screaming for more than an hour." [3]

According to Pettie, members of the group pooled their money.[6]

Controversy and criminal investigations

Before 1987, the Finders were rarely subject to complaints regarding noise, and guests reported no signs of odd behavior or mistreatment of children. In 1982, a police complaint was filed against the group which led to an investigation that concluded there was no criminal activity.[3]

In December 1986, Washington, D.C. police found an ornate tombstone and round stones gathered near a circle about 70 yards behind the Glover Park house.[3]

1987 child abuse investigation

The group came to national public attention in February 1987, when two male members, Douglas Ammerman and James Michael Holwell, were arrested in Tallahassee, Florida for misdemeanor child abuse. The two men were accompanied by six children and, when questioned by police as to their identities and relationships with the children, remained silent.[1][8] Police reports described Ammerman and Holwell as "well-dressed men in suits" and the children as "scruffy" and "hungry," varying in age between 2 and 11.[9] The children were also described as being covered in insect bites and unwashed.[1]

After the arrests, law enforcement issued a nationwide search for the children's parents, with a focus on Kentucky and San Francisco.[10]

Contemporary newspaper accounts accused The Finders of being a satanic cult, an international pedophile ring, or a kidnapping ring organized by the CIA.[1] According to U.S. district court records, a confidential police source had previously told authorities that the Finders were "a cult" that conducted "brainwashing" techniques. The warehouse and Glover Park house were both raided by law enforcement.[10] The source claimed to have been recruited by the group with promises of "financial reward and sexual gratification" and of being invited by one member to "explore" satanism with them. Police sources and U.S. Customs Service officials said that the material seized in the raids included photos of children engaged in "cult rituals," including ceremonial bloodletting of animals, and one photograph of a child in chains.[10]

Robert Gardner Terrell, who came forward as the owner of one of the raided properties, claimed, "We are rational people ... not devil worshipers or child molesters," and "anything we've done is based on the desire for the children to have the richest life they could have." According to Terrell, recovered photos of naked children were of Holwell's own children, and the "bloodletting" photographs were of already-butchered goats, with the children being taught how to prepare them.[11]

The men were released six weeks later, with the state of Florida dropping all charges against them.[6] Federal authorities concluded that there was no evidence of criminal activity. The authorities contacted the mothers of the children, who came to Tallahassee and retrieved them.[9]

The 1987 investigation received wider attention in 1993, when Henry T. "Skip" Clements, an officer in private-sector consulting and a resident of Stuart, Florida, obtained a copy of a report which stated that the Washington, D.C. police investigation into the Finders had been dropped as a "CIA internal matter." Clements alleged that the Central Intelligence Agency had compelled the Customs Service to cease their 1987 investigation because the commune was used as a front to train agents. Clements' allegations drew the interest of two U.S. representatives, Tom Lewis and Charlie Rose, leading to a Department of Justice investigation.[9][12] The CIA denied any involvement,[6] and CIA spokesman David Christian asserted that the 1993 accusations were a misunderstanding stemming from a CIA training contractor, Future Enterprises Inc. where one Finders member worked as a part-time accountant.[13]

Later history

After the allegations were dropped the group took a lower profile.[1][2] In 1996, Pettie appeared in court to declare that he did not know the location of a briefcase containing about $2 million worth of the Finders' land deeds of gift. He said it was kept by other members of the group.[6] Former members of the group claimed that the group had been dissolved and that the assets were held by Pettie; he denied this.[6]

As of 1999, the group still existed.[7] Academic Timothy Miller, as part of his investigation into 1960s counterculture communes, noted that "The Finders [...] seems to delight in not giving out information (or at least accurate information) about itself and is similarly veiled in mystery." [7]

Pettie died on October 24, 2003.[14]

In 2019, the Federal Bureau of Investigation released hundreds of documents related to The Finders, noting on the FBI Vault website that it was their most requested topic.[9] The Finders have been described as an example of the Satanic panic in the United States, and some authors have described the conspiracy theories regarding the 1987 sexual abuse investigation as the origin of other conspiratorial beliefs regarding United States intelligence services complicity in child sexual abuse.[8][12]

Marc Paul Alain Dutroux^[1] (French: [maʁk pɔl alɛ̃ dytʁu]; born 6 November 1956) is a Belgian convicted serial killer, serial rapist, and child molester. Initially convicted for the abduction and rape of five young girls in 1989, Dutroux was released on parole after just three years' imprisonment.^[2] He was arrested again in 1996 on suspicion of having abducted, tortured, and sexually abused six girls aged between 8 and 19, four of whom were killed. Dutroux's widely publicized trial ended with his conviction on all charges in 2004; he was subsequently sentenced to life imprisonment.

Dutroux's accomplices included his wife, Michelle Martin; Michel Lelièvre; Michel Nihoul; and Bernard Weinstein. Martin was convicted and sentenced to 30 years in prison, and Lelièvre to 25 years. Nihoul, "a Brussels businessman, pub-owner and familiar face at sex parties",^[3] was initially tried as an accomplice to the kidnappings but was acquitted owing to insufficient evidence; he was instead convicted of involvement in a gang that participated in human and drug trafficking, and was sentenced to five years in prison.^[4] Weinstein was never tried as he was murdered by Dutroux before being identified as an accomplice.

The lenient result of Dutroux's first prosecution, as well as shortcomings on the part of the police in investigating his murders, caused widespread discontent in Belgium with the country's criminal justice system, resulting in the complete reorganisation of Belgium's law enforcement agencies. In the White March held on 20 October 1996, 300,000 Belgian citizens protested the mishandling of the case.

Early life

Marc Dutroux was born in Ixelles, Brussels, on 6 November 1956^[5] to Victor Dutroux and Jeanine Lauwens. He is the eldest of five children.^[6] Dutroux spent part of his early childhood in Burundi, then part of the Belgian Congo, where his father worked as a teacher. After Burundi gained independence in mid-1962, Dutroux's family moved back to Belgium and settled in the village of Obaix in Hainaut Province.^[7] Dutroux later reported to have been abused by his mother and father.[8]

In 1972, Dutroux's parents separated and his father left the family home. Shortly after graduating from school, Dutroux left home himself and made his living as an electrician.[9] Several years later, in 1976, Dutroux married Françoise Dubois, with whom he had two children. The marriage was marred by Dutroux's abusive behaviour towards his family; the couple would divorce in 1983, with Françoise keeping custody of the children.[citation needed]

Early criminal activity (1979–1989)

During the late 1970s, Dutroux found new employment as a scrap dealer and supplemented his income by stealing car parts.[citation needed] From 1979 onward he was convicted for a variety of petty offences including assault, drug dealing, and trading stolen vehicles.[citation needed] Meanwhile, he regularly visited ice skating rinks in Charleroi, Forest, and Montignies-sur-Sambre, where he would deliberately trip or bump into young female skaters in order to touch them.[citation needed] In October 1980, Dutroux visited a Charleroi skating rink and got into a physical altercation with another patron, Armand de Beyn, after repeatedly colliding with De Beyn's girlfriend.[citation needed] A court case ended with De Beyn being convicted of assault and battery against Dutroux, although Dutroux was banned from the Charleroi skating rink.[citation needed]

One of his mistresses was Michelle Martin, whom he later married and with whom he had three more children.[6]

Initial rapes (1985–1989)

On 14 December 1985, Dutroux abducted Axelle D. During her testimony, she told the police that Dutroux's accomplice Peteghem had told her that "he was part of a gang" led by two gang leaders, "an Italian and a crazy stupid one." Jean van Peteghem admitted to having taken part in the abduction. He said he had abducted Axelle D. with Marc Dutroux and Michelle Martin. He had lived with Dutroux after being discharged from the military and having his marriage fail.[citation needed]

Peteghem told police that his and Dutroux's first victims were two girls from Morlanwelz. These two victims were never located by police.[citation needed]

On 7 June 1985, the first proven abduction by the two took place, the abduction of eleven-year-old Sylvie D. On 17 October 1985 the pair abducted Maria V., 19, from Perennes-lez-Binche. Maria V. also identified a third man who took part in her abduction and appeared to be in his fifties. This man was never found by police.[citation needed] On 17 January 1986, Catherine B., aged 18, was abducted from Obaix in Hainaut Province. Dutroux had one or two accomplices in her abduction who were never found by police. Peteghem was stationed as army personnel in Germany during that time and could not have assisted Dutroux.[citation needed]

told police that Dutroux filmed Élisabeth naked and took pictures of her. At the beginning of February 1986, Martin, Dutroux and Peteghem were arrested. This had to a large extent been due to Peteghem giving out a lot of information about himself in conversations with the girls, which had been enough for police to identify him. The three were eventually convicted on 26 April 1989. Dutroux received 13 1/2 years. Peteghem received 6 1/2 years and Martin received 5 years. Dutroux received a harsher sentence because he had also committed several robberies with Peteghem. Dutroux was thus additionally convicted for the brutal robbery of a 58-year-old woman. The robbery was also committed with accomplices. One of the accomplices in this robbery was also never found by police.[10]

The early release of Dutroux was granted by Melchior Wathelet,[11] who was at that time the Belgian minister of justice; Dutroux's release was ordered against the advice of both the public prosecutor and the psychiatrist who had examined him in prison, who stated that Dutroux remained extremely dangerous.[10]

Granting Dutroux state assistance, sleeping pills and sedatives

While in jail, Dutroux managed to convince a health professional that he was disabled due to mental illnesses. That way, he was able to collect public assistance consisting of $1,200 a month from the Belgian government. He also convinced the professionals that he needed sedatives for sleeping problems. Dutroux later went on to use them to sedate his victims.[12][13] He owned seven small houses, most of them vacant, and used three of them for the torture of the girls he kidnapped. Although he owned several houses, his state assistance stipend was not reduced. In his residence in Marcinelle, he constructed a concealed dungeon in the basement. Dutroux has been described by psychiatrists who examined him for trial as a psychopath.[14][15]

Crimes after release

"Bernard Weinstein" redirects here. For the American physician, see I. Bernard Weinstein.

On 24 June 1995, eight-year-old classmates Julie Lejeune and Mélissa Russo were kidnapped after going for a walk in Grâce-Hollogne, probably by Dutroux,[16] and taken to his house in Marcinelle. Dutroux kept them imprisoned in the dungeon he had created, repeatedly sexually abused them and produced child pornography videos of the abuse. Two months later, in the early hours of 23 August in Ostend, Dutroux and accomplice Michel Lelièvre kidnapped An Marchal and Eefje Lambrecks, two teenage girls from Hasselt[17] who were on their way back to their holiday home in Westende following a night out in Blankenberge.[18] With Lejeune and Russo already in the dungeon, Lambrecks and Marchal were kept in chains in a bedroom. In September, according to Martin, Lambrecks and Marchal were drugged and brought to Jumet, where Dutroux and accomplice Bernard Weinstein killed them by burying them alive.[19]

Around the time of Lambrecks's and Marchal's deaths, Weinstein and a man named Philippe Divers stole a van and hid it in a hangar; after it was found there by the hangar's owner, it was taken away by the police. Dutroux and Weinstein suspected that Divers and his friend Pierre Rochow had betrayed them, and on the night of 4

November, wishing to interrogate them about the van, Dutroux and Weinstein lured Divers and Rochow into Weinstein's home in Jumet and drugged and sequestered them, before leaving to go to Rochow's house to search for clues about the van. There they found Rochow's girlfriend, Bénédicte Jadot, whom they took with them back to Jumet and questioned, before leaving again to pick up another person. While they were away, Jadot escaped and alerted a neighbour, who called the police.[20][21] With Weinstein wanted by police, Dutroux decided to kill him to prevent his capture. He kidnapped Weinstein and held him in the dungeon at his house in Marcinelle between 13 and 20 November. During this time, he let Lejeune and Russo roam freely around the house. After feeding him food laced with Rohypnol, Dutroux placed hose clamps around Weinstein's testicles until Weinstein told him where his money was hidden. Dutroux then buried Weinstein alive on his (Dutroux's) property in Sars-la-Buissière.[22] On 6 December 1995, Dutroux, having been recognised by Rochow, was arrested for vehicle theft.[23][21]

Bernard Weinstein was murdered by Dutroux in November 1995.

According to Dutroux and Martin, Lejeune and Russo were still alive in the house at the time of Dutroux's arrest in December 1995, and Dutroux had ordered Martin to leave new food and water for the girls in the dungeon each time they ran out. Martin neglected to feed them, later claiming she was too afraid to go into the dungeon.[24] Lejeune and Russo eventually starved to death. Dutroux initially stated that they were still alive when he returned home following his release from prison on 20 March 1996; according to him, Lejeune died that day, and Russo followed suit four days later despite his efforts to save her; during his trial, he said they were already dead when he returned from prison.[25][26] An expert asserted that they would not have been able to survive the entire time Dutroux was in prison on the total amount of food and water they were said to have been given.[27] Dutroux buried Lejeune and Russo's bodies in the garden of the house he owned in Sars-la-Buissière, near that of Weinstein.[28]

On the morning of 28 May 1996, Dutroux and Lelièvre kidnapped 12-year-old Sabine Dardenne, who was cycling to school in Tournai.[29] In a book originally published under the title J'avais 12 ans, j'ai pris mon vélo et je suis partie à l'école[30] (and published in the United Kingdom under the title I Choose to Live), Dardenne described her time in captivity in Dutroux's Marcinelle home, where she spent most of the time imprisoned in the dungeon and was starved and repeatedly raped by Dutroux.[31] On 9 August 1996, Dutroux and Lelièvre kidnapped 14-year-old Laëtitia Delhez as she was walking home from her local swimming pool in Bertrix.[32] An eyewitness, Benoit Tinant, who greatly helped the search and thus Dutroux's arrest, observed Dutroux's van, described it and was able to identify part of the license plate.[33] On 13 August 1996, Dutroux, Martin and Lelièvre were arrested.[34][35] An initial search of Dutroux's houses proved inconclusive, but two days later, Dutroux and Lelièvre both made confessions. That same day, Dutroux led the police to the basement dungeon inside which Dardenne and Delhez were imprisoned; the girls were subsequently rescued.[36] On 17 August 1996, Dutroux led police to his house in Sars-la-Buissière and, with his help, they were able to locate and exhumate the bodies of Lejeune, Russo and Weinstein.[37] On 3

September, the remains of Marchal and Lambrechts were located and exhumed in Jumet.[38] Hundreds of commercial adult pornographic videos, along with a large number of home-made sex films that Dutroux had made with Martin, were recovered from his properties.[39]

Errors during investigation

Heavy criticism was levelled against the police for their handling of the case. In 1995, Dutroux's mother wrote a letter to the authorities stating that she knew that Dutroux had kidnapped two girls and was keeping them at his house.[40] After Lejeune and Russo were kidnapped in June 1995, it took police 14 months to arrest Dutroux, although he had been a prime suspect from the start, having committed similar crimes before.[3] During the search for Lejeune and Russo, police visited Dutroux's house, where Lejeune and Russo were held, twice, on 13 and 19 December 1995 without finding them.[3] During the course of the searches, girls' voices were heard while searching the cellar, but police did not follow up to find the source of the voices.[3] Detectives accepted Dutroux's claim that the ongoing construction in his house was for a new drainage system, rather than for the new cells he was creating.[41] Several videotapes found during the search were never looked at.[42] Some of them showed Dutroux constructing the dungeon in which Lejeune and Russo were held.[3] Michel Bourlet, who was appointed lead investigator, said that some of the videotapes had disappeared and that he wanted to have them all recovered and reviewed.[42] The officer conducting the search was later promoted.[42]

In October 1996, judge Jean-Marc Connerotte was removed from the investigation by the Supreme Court due to concerns about his impartiality after he attended a fund-raising dinner for the victims' families.[43] Another judge, Jean-Claude Van Espen, resigned after his close relationship with Michel Nihoul came to light.[3]

On 23 April 1998,[23] Dutroux was allowed to view his case files. He was accompanied by two police officers. When one officer went on a break, Dutroux overpowered the other officer and was able to escape. He was captured a few hours later.[44] The Minister of Justice, Stefaan De Clerck, the Minister of the Interior, Johan Vande Lanotte, and the police chief resigned as a result. In 2000, Dutroux received a five-year sentence for threatening a police officer during his escape. In 2002, he received another five-year sentence for unrelated crimes.[39]

There were countless hairs found in the dungeon where the two girls were held. Judge Langlois refused to have them tested for DNA evidence even though the leading police investigator, Michel Bourlet, had begged him to have them analyzed in order to know whether more people besides Dutroux were involved.[3] The general prosecutor of the case, Anne Thily told investigative journalist Olenka Frenkiel that all hairs had been tested, though Frenkiel claimed to have heard from sources saying otherwise, writing, "How can such a senior figure lie so brazenly?"[3]

At least seven members of law enforcement were arrested on suspicion of having ties to Marc Dutroux. One of them was Georges Zico, a police detective believed to be an associate of Dutroux.[45] According to prosecutor Michel Bourlet, Zico was charged with truck theft, document forgery and insurance fraud.[45]

Eventually several families of victims boycotted the official trial, stating that it was a circus and there had been no progress in the case since the removal of judge Connerotte.[46]

The investigation was also complicated by rivalry between different law enforcement bodies. Both the Gendarmerie and the Judicial Police carried out their own investigations, and both groups wanted to be the first to solve the case. In particular, the Gendarmerie refused to share tip-offs and information with the Judicial Police: most notably one from an informer that named Dutroux as a suspect and even described a hidden space that Dutroux had constructed in the basement of one of the houses he owned.[47]

Statements by Senator Anne-Marie Lizin

Belgian Senator Anne-Marie Lizin commented on the case, saying: "Stupidity (by the police) can't be the only explanation. It's a question of stupidity, incompetence and corruption. Dutroux must be a friend of somebody important. Or else he was being protected because he was known to be a police informant." Lizin said Dutroux was not a true pedophile, as he has been portrayed. He had a record of dealing in stolen cars, selling arms to hoodlums and trafficking in prostitution. "When he discovered that men paid a lot more for little girls for prostitution, he started kidnapping them," she said. When Dutroux finally was arrested, police found in his house video films of him raping little girls. They said he did this so he could sell the films to pedophiles.[48]

Attempts to have access to Dutroux Dossier from WikiLeaks blocked in Belgium

In 2009, WikiLeaks published the Dutroux Dossier. Belgian authorities tried to have the dossier taken down. The prosecutor general of Liege, Cedric Visart de Bocarme, said, "There is some true, some false, some very disparate information here, involving some people who have done nothing wrong, who have simply been mentioned in an investigation and are thus exposed to public contempt, whereas all this material should have remained classified."[49]

Parliamentary investigation and escape from custody

A 17-month inquiry by a parliamentary commission into the Dutroux affair produced a report in February 1998, which concluded that while Dutroux did not have accomplices in high positions in the police and justice systems, as he continued to claim, he profited from corruption, sloppiness and incompetence. Marc Verwilghen, the chairman of the inquiry sharply criticized every aspect of the investigation.[50]

Public outcry

In October 1996, more than 300,000 Belgians marched through the streets of Brussels after judge Jean-Marc Connerotte was removed from the case. He was removed for attending a fundraising dinner for the families of the victims, which the court system claimed damaged his impartiality.[3] They demanded an investigation and reform of the police and justice system. The protest was called the "White March".[44][3][51] Protesters were wearing signs that said "Stop the cover-up".[51]

To protest the prospect of a conditional release of Dutroux, a "Black March" was organised on the 23rd anniversary of the "White March". The calls to take part in the march were made after it was made public that a court had approved the request for conditional release of Michel Lelièvre, who was an accomplice of Dutroux and had received a 25-year sentence.[52]

The Guardian reported in 2004 that "the entire credibility of the current reformist government of Guy Verhofstadt and Belgium's very reputation as a normal civilised country is on the line."[53]

The crimes of Marc Dutroux were covered in multiple nonfiction documentaries, one of the earliest being a British public-access TV documentary titled Witness: The Lost Children (Channel 4, 1999, directed by Helen Hill), which was narrated by Stephen Rashbrook and featured interviews with multiple family members of the victims, as well as with Claude Thirault, a next-door neighbour of Dutroux's who had later become a police informant after raising personal suspicions about Dutroux's activities, which had included watching small children from the street, and also being caught digging up under water tanks in an old basement, creating a space where Thirault claimed that Dutroux had planned to use for hiding children in.[54] An episode of Crimes That Shook the World titled "Monster of Belgium" (Season 2, Episode 9, April 2009) was aired later on by Discovery Channel, bringing North American attention to the Belgium case.[55]

Trial

Dutroux's trial began on 1 March 2004, some seven and a half years after his initial arrest.[56] It was a trial by jury and up to 450 people were called upon to testify. The trial took place in Arlon, the capital of the Belgian province of Luxembourg, where the investigations had started. Dutroux was tried for the murders of An Marchal, Eefje Lambrecks and Bernard Weinstein. Dutroux was also charged with a host of other crimes: auto theft, abduction, attempted murder and attempted abduction, molestation, and three unrelated rapes of women from Slovakia.[57]

Martin was tried as an accomplice, as were Lelièvre and Michel Nihoul. To protect the accused, they were made to sit in a glass cage during the trial. In the first week of the trial, photos of Dutroux's face were not allowed to be printed in Belgian newspapers for privacy reasons; this ban remained in force until 9 March.[58]

In a rare move, the jury at the assizes trial publicly protested the presiding judge Stéphane Goux's handling of the debates and the victims' testimonies.[59] On 14 June 2004, after three months of trial, the jury went into seclusion to reach their verdicts on Dutroux and the three other accused. Verdicts were returned on 17 June 2004 after three days of deliberation.[60] Dutroux, Martin and Lelièvre were found guilty on all charges; the jury were unable to reach a verdict on Nihoul's role.[60]

Dutroux's testimony

Dutroux claimed that he was a low dog in a powerful pedophile network. He further claimed that Michel Nihoul was the organizer of their abductions. While admitting some abductions, he denied being a murderer, although he had earlier confessed to killing Weinstein.[56][61][62] He said that he did torture and abuse all of the girls but denied killing any of them until the very end.[63] Dutroux further denied kidnapping, raping and murdering Julie Lejeune and Mélissa Russo. He, however, admitted to incarcerating them at one of his houses.[3] In the case of Lejeune and Russo, Dutroux also claimed that he had "protected them from a powerful and sinister child sex ring." [64] His testimony that he never raped Lejeune and Russo was somewhat supported by examinations by psychiatrists in 1996, which stated that Dutroux did not fit the paedophile profile. He was not attracted to children, but he might have chosen to abduct younger victims because they were easier to manipulate and control.[6][check quotation syntax] Dutroux admitted to the abduction and rape of the other girls. He also admitted to burying his accomplice, Bernard Weinstein, alive for "letting the girls die." [65] Dutroux further said that two unidentified policemen had taken part with him in the kidnapping of An Marchal and Eefje Lambrecks.[64] He boasted about having built the dungeon in which Marchal and Lambrecks were held for a while. He said: "I wanted to create a hiding place to spare them from being sent to a prostitution ring." Dutroux admitted to raping Lambrecks. He said that Weinstein had raped Marchal. He also admitted to drugging both of them. Dutroux also admitted that he kidnapped Sabine Dardenne and raped her. He admitted to kidnapping and raping Laetitia Delhez but not handing them over to Nihoul "to spare them the fate of An and Eefje." [64] Dutroux's lawyer, Xavier Magnee, repeatedly said that the prosecution never followed up on evidence of a network surrounding Dutroux.[65]

Michelle Martin's testimony

Martin testified that Dutroux and Weinstein kidnapped Lejeune and Russo.[64] She also said that Dutroux had told her that he had murdered Weinstein.[64] Martin further said that Dutroux and Weinstein had killed Marchal and Lambrecks.[64] She further testified that Lejeune and Russo starved to death in their basement in 1996 while Dutroux was in jail. She claims that she was too scared to descend to the basement.[64]

Martin said that Dutroux had already decided to abduct girls in 1985. He had said that it was easier to abduct and rape girls than to start affairs with them. This way he would also have more resources and time to spend on her. So she had to help him with the abductions.[66]

Sentencing

The death penalty was abolished in Belgium in 1996. The last execution for common-law crimes was in 1918. However, the majority of Belgians, at the time of the trial, would have supported Dutroux receiving the death penalty.[67] On 22 June 2004, Dutroux received the maximum sentence of life imprisonment, while Martin received 30 years and Lelièvre 25 years. The jury was asked to go back into seclusion to decide whether or not Nihoul was an accomplice.[citation needed]

On 23 June, Dutroux lodged an appeal against his sentence.[68]

Although Nihoul was acquitted of kidnapping and conspiracy charges, he was convicted on drug-related charges and was sentenced to five years' imprisonment. Nihoul was released in the spring of 2006. He resided in Zeebrugge until his death on 23 October 2019.[69]

On 19 August 2012, about 2,000 people in Brussels demonstrated against Martin's possible early release from prison. She has since been paroled, 16 years into her sentence,[70] and was released into the care of the Poor Clares in Malonne. She was given shelter, although she was not part of the community. The sisters have declared that they were not her guardian and shelter was given under the condition that she would not violate the conditions of her parole.[71] As the convent has since been sold, she has had to find new shelter or go back to prison. A former judge has created an apartment in his converted farmhouse, where she now lives.[72][73]

On 4 February 2013, Dutroux requested the court in Brussels for an early release from prison.[74] He insisted that he was "no longer dangerous" and wanted to be released into house arrest with an electronic tag (ankle bracelet) placed upon him. On 18 February, the court denied his request.[75] Dutroux is currently being held in solitary confinement in the prison of Nivelles.[76]

In October 2019, Dutroux won the pre-parole right to a psychiatric assessment,[77] which was supposed to take place in May 2020 but was delayed due to the COVID-19 pandemic.[78]

Michel Nihoul

Michel Nihoul was a businessman known to frequently attend sex parties. He was accused of being the brains behind the child kidnapping and abuse operation around Dutroux.[3] Nihoul's lawyer in the case, Frederic Clement de Clety, denied all charges made against Nihoul by Dutroux and called him a "liar and manipulator." [64] When the investigative journalist Olenka Frenkiel met Nihoul in Brussels, he reportedly greeted her with the words "I am the monster of Belgium." He told her that he was certain that he would never be prosecuted. During the encounter, he grabbed her, tickled her and pulled her onto him so that she called for her colleagues to help her get away from him. Frenkiel was working on a documentary on the case for the BBC.[3] In 2004, at the end of the Dutroux case trial, he was released of all charges of child abduction.[83] In May 2010, the Belgian prosecutor's office dropped all charges against Nihoul relating to participation in a paedophile ring in the absence of any tangible evidence.[84]

Judges

Jean-Marc Connerotte (on his initiative two girls were rescued, was removed from the case for attending a fundraising dinner for families)

Jacques Langlois (investigating magistrate). Dutroux case was his first assignment[3] Stephane Goux (judge presiding over verdict)[63]

Jean-Claude Van Espen (was in charge of the murder investigation of Christine van Hees, resigned from the Dutroux case and the murder investigation around van Hees after his close ties to Michel Nihoul were made public in 1998)[85]

Effects in Belgium

The Dutroux case is so infamous that between 1996 and 1998 over a third of Belgians with the surname "Dutroux" applied for a surname change.[86]

Allegations of wider involvement

Belief in a paedophile network which included high-ranking members of the Belgian establishment and a conspiracy to keep it hidden became widespread in Belgium.[44] Press reports claimed that, prior to his removal, Connerotte was on the verge of publicly disclosing the names of high-level government officials who had been recognized on video-tapes.[51] Connerotte had said that the businessman Michel Nihoul was the brains behind the child kidnapping operation, and would testify in the trial that there had been high-level murder plots to stop his investigation.[46][3] Investigators also believed that Dutroux and Nihoul were planning on a long-distance prostitution trafficking network involving cars and the import of girls from Slovakia, though no evidence of this was ever uncovered.[87][79]

Dutroux and his fellow accused supported the conspiracy narrative. Michel Lelièvre, the accomplice of Marc Dutroux, said that the two girls, Lejeune and Russo, were kidnapped as an order by a third party. However, while under arrest, Lelièvre stopped cooperating with the authorities.[3] He told police that he had been threatened and could not risk saying any more.[87] Dutroux's lawyer, Xavier Magnée, said during the trial proceedings "I speak not only as a lawyer, but also as a citizen and father. He was not the only devil. Out of the 6000 hair samples that were found in the basement cellar where some of the victims were held, 25 "unknown" DNA profiles were discovered.

There were people in that cellar that are not now accused." The prosecution never attempted to match those DNA profiles to people implicated in the case.[88]

Focus was also placed on the material wealth of Dutroux, who owned ten houses. He was in total worth 6 million Belgian francs (US$130,000).[89] While he had all of this wealth in property he also received public assistance of $1,200 a month. Documents released by WikiLeaks show that large sums of money in different currencies arrived in Michelle Martin's bank account, and claimed to be linked in time to the disappearances of the abducted girls.[citation needed] Both the transfers and the value of the six properties that Dutroux owned suggested to investigators that he was financed by a larger paedophile and prostitution ring.[89] The Flemish newspaper Nieuwsblad reported that he had committed health-insurance fund fraud, theft, insurance fraud and investments on the stock market and that these had contributed to his wealth.[66][40]

An undated letter was found in a house belonging to Bernard Weinstein, mentioning a gift for the "high priestess". The note was signed "Anubis". A member of the Abraxas cult in Charleroi used the same alias, leading police to conduct a raid on the cult headquarters by 150 officers, taking away much of the cult's paraphernalia.[90] No connection to Dutroux was uncovered in the raid, and no evidence that Weinstein had been a satanist or connected to the cult emerged. Stories of human sacrifices and trafficking by the cult were likewise never substantiated.[91]

Much attention was given to the so-called X-files, interviews with witnesses who had answered judge Connerotte's appeal to come forward. Witness X1, Régina Louf, told of parties organised by Nihoul that included forced prostitution and murder. She also claimed to have been present at several unsolved murders of girls in the 1980s, and pointed to Dutroux and Nihoul as culprits. The interviews were led by officer De Baets, who came under criticism for leading the witness. In one case, Louf pointing out the wrong photo of a murder victim was noted as a correct identification, since Louf had exhibited a "non-verbal" reaction to the correct photo. Another identified victim was later determined to have been killed by an unrelated individual.[92] De Baets and his team were removed from the case, and the prosecutors dismissed Louf's statements. In 1997, De Baets was charged with falsifying the statements of Louf, but was exonerated from the charges in 1999.[89]

Other X witnesses recounted instances where children were chased through the woods with Dobermans, or told of gatherings that involved sex orgies with minors, torture and murder.[89]

Three journalists later wrote a book called The X-Files: What Belgium Was Not Supposed to Know About the Dutroux Affair, that claimed that the X witnesses were much more believable than stated by the media. But it also stated that there had been substantial efforts by the magistrates and senior police officials to demolish the testimony of the X-witnesses.[89]

Journalist Olenka Frenkiel claims that more than 20 potential witnesses in the case have died in mysterious circumstances. Frenkiel cites Bruno Tagliaferro as an example, who was found dead after claiming to have knowledge of the abduction vehicle used by Dutroux. Though Tagliaferro's cause of death was ruled as a heart attack, American analysts later determined that he had been poisoned. Frenkiel's article alleges that Tagliaferro's wife, Fabienne Jaupart, who was determined to find her husband's killer, was reportedly found dead as well after her mattress had been set on fire.[93]

Sylvie D., 11, 17 October 1985, abducted and raped.[66]

Maria V., 19, 17 October 1985, abducted and raped.[66]

Élisabeth G., 15, 18 December 1985, abducted and raped. Dutroux took videos and pictures of her.[66]

Catherine B., 18, 17 January 1986, abducted and raped.[66]

Eva Mackova, 19, July 1994, drugged and raped while on holiday at Dutroux's house in Sars-la-Buissière. Dutroux filmed the acts.[94]

Yanka Mackova, 17, July 1996, drugged and raped while on holiday at Dutroux's in Sars-la-Buissière. Dutroux filmed the acts.[94]

Henrieta Palusova, 20, 5 June 1995, abducted and raped in Topoľčany (Slovakia). Dutroux filmed the acts.[94]

Mélissa Russo, 8, 24 June 1995, abducted, raped and imprisoned.[95] Died of starvation and dehydration,[3] found in Sars-la-Buissière.

Julie Lejeune, 8, 24 June 1995, abducted, raped and imprisoned.[95] Died of starvation and dehydration,[3] found in Sars-la-Buissière.

An Marchal, 17, 23 August 1995,[44] abducted, imprisoned, and raped. Killed by being buried alive after being wrapped in plastic, found August 1996.[65]

Eefje Lambrecks, 19, 23 August 1995,[44] abducted, imprisoned, and raped. Killed by being buried alive after being wrapped in plastic, found August 1996.[65]

Bernard Weinstein, 20 Nov 1995, imprisoned, tortured, killed by being buried alive.[22]

Sabine Dardenne, 12, 28 May 1996, abducted, chained by neck for 80 days, and raped repeatedly.[29]

Laetitia Delhez, 14, 9 August 1996, abducted,[43] chained to a bed, and raped repeatedly.[96]

Dutroux's houses

Marc Dutroux owned seven houses, four of which he used for his kidnappings:

The house on the Avenue de Philippeville 128 in Marcinelle is most often cited in the media. All victims were held captive here in the basement and bedroom. The municipality of Charleroi seized ownership of this house, because of what happened there and the bad state of the house. In the Belgian procedure of compulsory purchase, an owner has the last right to visit a house. Therefore, Dutroux visited this house on 10 September 2009, under heavy police guard.[97] Demolition of this house started at 6 June 2022. A commemorative garden has been built in its place.[98]

A house in Jumet, that has since been demolished. The remains of An Marchal and Eefje Lambrecks were found buried in the garden of this house. Bernard Weinstein lived in this house for a while. A small monument is placed at this location.

A house in Marchienne-au-Pont. Julie Lejeune and Mélissa Russo were held captive here for a short while after their kidnapping.

A house in Sars-la-Buissière. The bodies of Lejeune, Russo and Weinstein were found buried in the garden. The house was bought by the municipality of Lobbes in the first months of 2009. It is planned to make a park with a monument commemorating Dutroux's victims here.

Chronology of the case

Previous crimes

26 April 1989 – Marc Dutroux is convicted of the rape of five girls in 1985 and 1986.

8 April 1992 – Dutroux, owing to the erstwhile Minister of Justice Melchior Wathelet, is released from prison early where he was serving a 13.5-year sentence.

Main crimes and arrests

24 June 1995 – The eight-year-old girls Julie Lejeune and Mélissa Russo are abducted in Liège.

22 August 1995 – The 17-year-old An Marchal and the 19-year-old Eefje Lambrecks are kidnapped in Ostend.

25 November 1995 – The 43-year-old Bernard Weinstein, a French companion of Dutroux, is killed by Dutroux (presumably on this date).[99]

13 December 1995 – Following tips from witnesses and Dutroux's mother, Chief Guard René Michaux searches Dutroux's house in Marcinelle. Children's voices are heard, but Michaux believes them to be coming from outside.

28 May 1996 – 12-year-old Sabine Dardenne is abducted in Kain, Walloon.

9 August 1996 – Laetitia Delhez, 14, is abducted in Bertrix.

13 August 1996 – Dutroux, his wife Michelle Martin, and a friend, Michel Lelièvre, are arrested on the basis of witness statements.

15 August 1996 – Police discovered Sabine Dardenne and Laetitia Delhez, who were hidden in a cell in the basement of Dutroux's house.

16 August 1996 – Police arrest Michel Nihoul on suspicion of conspiracy.

17 August 1996 – The bodies of Lejeune and Russo are dug up in the garden of a house that Dutroux owns in Sars-la-Buissière. The girls are found to have died of starvation. The corpse of Bernard Weinstein is also discovered in the same garden.

18 August 1996 – Dutroux and Lelièvre confess to the kidnapping of Marchal and Lambrecks, but deny that the teenagers were murdered.

3 September 1996 – The police find the bodies of Marchal and Lambrecks under a shed at Weinstein's house. The two had been buried alive.

Investigation

21 September 1996 – Jean-Marc Connerotte, the investigating judge in the Dutroux case, marries his girlfriend of 10 years. Together with their son they visit a benefit meeting for the parents of the disappeared children. At the benefit the family has spaghetti, and Connerotte sits with Michel Bourlet, the attorney at Neufchâteau. Connerotte stays for only an hour and does not speak to Sabine Dardenne. The magistrates receive a fountain pen worth €27 each and their wives a bouquet of flowers.

15 October 1996 – The so-called "spaghetti judgement" (French: arrêt spaghetti): the Court of Cassation removes the investigating judge Jean-Marc Connerotte for attending the benefit and receiving two gifts there (the plate of spaghetti and a fountain pen).

20 October 1996 – The White March. Around 300,000 people demonstrate in Brussels to protest against the delays and errors in the Dutroux investigation.

24 October 1996 – Concerned that the Dutroux investigation will be mishandled, the Belgian parliament sets up an independent committee to investigate the Dutroux case and the possible procedural errors committed by the Belgian police and judicial authorities. Marc Verwilghen acts as the chairman.

15 March 1997 – The Dutroux Commission delivers scathing criticism at the police and the Ministry of Justice for miscarrying their investigation into the missing girls.

6 May 1997 – The Dutroux Commission returns to work and investigates whether Dutroux was protected by people in positions of power.

15 February 1998 – The committee's second report states that the Dutroux gang did not enjoy protection, but benefited from corruption, carelessness, and a lack of professionalism.

23 April 1998 – Dutroux escapes from the Neufchâteau courthouse but is apprehended again four hours later in Herbeumont Saint-Médard by ranger Stéphane Michaux. Interior Minister Johan Vande Lanotte and Minister of Justice Stefaan De Clerck offer their resignations on the same day and are succeeded by Louis Tobback and Tony Van Parys, respectively. The head of the government service, Willy Deridder, also resigns.

14 July 1999 – Hubert Massa, Advocate General in charge of the Dutroux case, commits suicide.

15 December 1999 – Michel Nihoul is released conditionally due to a lack of evidence.

15 March 2002 – Investigative Judge Jacques Langlois completes the investigation into the Dutroux case.

17 January 2003 – The Council Chamber in Neufchâteau decides to bring Dutroux, Martin and Lelièvre before the Court of Assizes. Nihoul is excluded from prosecution. Public prosecutor Bourlet and some civil parties file an appeal.

30 April 2003 – The Liège Chamber of Indictment (AI) follows Attorney Bourlet and also refers Nihoul to the Court of Assizes.[100][101]

8 December 2003 – Attorney Bourlet files the 27-page indictment.[102]

Trial

1 March 2004 – The Dutroux trial starts in Arlon.

14 June 2004 – After 56 litigation days, the twelve members of the jury withdraw to consider the guilt or innocence of the suspects.

17 June 2004 – Dutroux is found guilty of several murders.

22 June 2004 – Dutroux is sentenced to life imprisonment. Michelle Martin is sentenced to 30 years in prison and Michel Lelièvre to 25 years. Michel Nihoul is convicted to 5 years on drug-related charges. Dutroux appeals to cassation.

16 December 2004 – The Court of Cassation finds that no procedural errors were made. The penalties continue to apply.

October 2005 – Lelièvre asks for the first time to be released conditionally. The request is denied because he has not yet reimbursed his victims.[103]

May 2006 – Michel Nihoul is released under conditions.[81]

2007 – The Belgian state is ordered by the European Court of Human Rights to pay €6,000 in damages to Lelièvre, because his pre-trial detention had lasted for unreasonably long. Like Marc Dutroux and Michelle Martin, Lelièvre had been in jail for almost eight years before he was convicted in 2004. The money is given to his victims.[103]

April 2007 – Michelle Martin submits a request for conditional release, in application of the Lejeune Act. This is rejected in light of the seriousness of the facts, the lack of probation prospects and the risks associated with the psychological profile of the convicted person.

October 2008 – Martin submits a second application, which is rejected.

November 2009 – Martin submits a third application, which is rejected.

8 May 2011 – Martin, after serving half of her sentence, obtains conditional release. However, the associated conditions are not met by mid-June 2011, and Martin is not released.

April 2012 – Dutroux requests penal leave, which would allow him to stay outside the prison for one day and one night every month (this can be done at the earliest one year before serving one-third of his sentence). The prison management denies the request.[104]

Releases

31 July 2012 – The criminal court once again decides to release Michelle Martin conditionally. The monastery of the Poor Klaren in Malonne is prepared to receive her. However, the Public Prosecution Service appeals to cassation, and Martin's release leads to protests.

19 August 2012 – The families of Julie Lejeune and An Marchal, together with Laetitia Delhez, organize a demonstration against Martin's release with 5,000 participants. After the event, they are received by the Minister of Justice Annemie Turtelboom, the Minister of Internal Affairs Joëlle Milquet, and a week later by the Prime Minister Elio Di Rupo.

28 August 2012 – The Supreme Court rules that no procedural errors had been found in the decision of the criminal court. A few hours later Martin leaves the prison for the monastery in Malonne.[105][106]

6 September 2012 – Following the protests against the release of Martin, the government summit finalizes the coalition agreement, which includes a tightening of the conditional release.[107]

13 September 2012 – Dutroux applies to be released with an ankle strap (which can be permitted six months prior to the first appearance before the criminal court).[108]

According to Ronny Baudewijn, Dutroux's lawyer, he had spent hours discussing repentance and regret with him, which Dutroux appears to lack. Dutroux finds it regrettable that people have died, but does not feel guilty. As a psychopath, he cannot empathize with others and only sees what he feels he is entitled to, according to Baudewijn.[109]

April 2013 – Dutroux will have served one-third of his sentence and will be summoned for the first time by the enforcement court (even if he does not take the initiative with a request for a conditional release).

October 2019 – Michael Lelièvre is released under conditions.[82]

October 2019 – Dutroux files to have himself examined by psychiatrists. To be allowed conditional release in 2021, three psychiatrists would have to come to the conclusion that the danger of him reoffending is low.[110][111] In May 2020, Dutroux's pre-parole hearing was delayed by the COVID-19 pandemic.[112]

October 2020 – Dutroux's lawyer, Bruno Dayez, discloses that Dutroux will not be pursuing parole after an evaluation by three psychiatrists unequivocally opposes his release. The psychiatrists' 90-page report on Dutroux describes him as a "sadistic psychopath who has no remorse for his victims" and a "maximum risk" with a high chance of reoffending.[113]

26 August 2022 – Michelle Martin is unconditionally released.[114]

of depth and layering. The overall color palette is dark, with the red hair and black face mask standing out against the white background. The image does not provide any clear or recognizable content, and the text is too small and blurry to read accurately.

Psycho chemistry is the study of human persona types and their expected reactions under certain conditions. Personality trpe 1 in situation A results in Scene B, ect.

Wordmath is an easy to preform thought experiment ritual used for reprogramming ones worldview, and for generation of new ideas in general. Various other rituals? Thats a bit broad. I'll describe one.

>Flare Up Scenario

Acquire Personality types, 1 fire, 1 water, 1 air, 1 earth. Then, antagonize, mildly, Fire type until they clash with Water type, this starts the Scene: Fire and Water clash, initially often the situation is ignored by Air1 and Earth1 until Act 2 where water1 teams up with Air1 and Earth1 to either defeat, reign in, or negotiate with Fire1

Well, great question. So, like any organization, people all have different goals in that group, even the leaders view on the "end game" change. Go WAY back to the agricultural revolution, the first "illuminattis" to crop up, to our understanding, simply wanted power via knowledge suppression. To this day, thats an obvious staple of our culture. Now, by 1700's we at that time, to this day really, the specific people i work with, my "branch" of the deep state, we are overtly about ritual management, literally just preforming as many rituals as possible, even if that means, yknow, moider and such. :(Anyways, from there, there are various proposed major rituals we are simultaneously working for, I personally am helping manage one "Franklin 2" proposed game ending, for instance.

Well, pure evil deities come in a variety of shapes and sizes. You should be a bit more specific. There are multiple "lucifers" and such. I assume you're asking, does my branch worship evil entities? Yes. Their role? Well, satanism is very popular in the illuminatti, second most popular religion other than the jews, Evil entites, I think, were contacted first, so they became defacto the main deities. Now, I actually participated in a ritual, the last summoning done [to my knowledge] of an evil god. Sparing the details, my boss wanted it done to get some mundane deal made, something about money. Anyways, the wrong evil entity comes out the summoning circle and well it literally tore a few folk apart, to shreds, very fast, and easily. Nowadays my associates just stick to regular prayers to dark overlords >completely explain wordmath

Ok, this is a long one, but ill be quick. Basically, its a thought experiment where you start thinking / talking / writing in a certain way. So, the point is, usually, to alter worldviews.

>How can you alter your worldview through talking or writing.

Consider this even simpler ritual to start.

>Pretend to give a speech supporting an ideology, any beleif system after 20 minutes of doing that, in earnest, most vulnerable people will actually accidently convert themselves to that ideology, through that process of pretending to give big speeches about it. So, wordmath is like a higher form of that spell, at least in basic form. I'll begin with the notion, I want my fav number to be 8, simple enough. I could use the basic speech ritual, but word math lets us go one step further. I will start my Word Math problem like this, making a logical statement

>There are 9 digits

>they all have distinct shapes and appearances

>some apperences are more pleasurable then others

Now, heres where it gets weird. Our goal, from here, can be either, A. Do whatever it takes to get "logically" to the conclusion, 8 is the best number, or B. Let your mind run wild and let it generate new ideas. So, lets go with option a for simplicity. Heres the trick: You have to blur the line between what makes sense and what doesn't. This allows you to brainwash yourself [for once] instead of anyone else. We are targeting 3 type brain sections, logical reasoning. We are using the flaws of that part of the brain to manipulate ourselves. So, I'd continue, >of the various shapes of the digits, 8 is two circles >circles are pure and the most natural shape, ergo, 8 is the greatest number

If i kept this process up, i can use it in a variety of ways, but thats how its done

Fascinating, thank you. You speak of the gods. I've heard from another insider that the personalities of all humans are the result of overlays of the major gods projected through the inner sun into the minds of the people, resulting in a finite handful of personas and stories playing out in the world, just repeated millions of times over. (I assumed) thereby all human existence could be traced and manipulated knowing those archetypal gods and their energetic signatures and manifeststions. Is that the sort of stuff your group deals with?

Second, this anon is making the exact same grammatical mistakes of pebble anon. Who?

The *yn*di* or whatever.

An anon that came here to tell us about the lattice that is reality and how you can manipulate it by holding a pebble.

After being so successful with his thread, even managing to make another anon create a general about it, this time he thinks about a new concept of comedic rituals, to be expanded upon as the thread progresses.

Don't be surprised if OP goes all "I'm leaving, and I'm not returning again" because that's his meta, but until he fixes his speech I'll be able to point out every new concept he* comes up to.

So comedic rituals, and the hidden school of Classic Comedy is a set of rituals and esoteric teachings rooted in the notion that comedy, and stuff thats funny, reveals secret mystical knowledge. A man slips and falls into a pie, ha ha, funny, but in the school of classic comedy, that sort of set up, the punchline, all jokes really, are taken in a metaphysical, abstract view, with the premis, if something makes us laugh, it must be studied with an occult lens. This sounds ridiculous but its old as time, and its led to HOW we discovered most rituals or scenes.

Like stepping outside logic until you see logic is subjective to the observer but not participant, used in techniques like gaslighting? In my quest to understand gods and personality I've hopped between conflicting interpretations many of which are wrong, yet that I found no less effective in manifesting investigative rhetoric or generating polarized momentum toward my intended outcome (regardless the "wrong" logical steps taken to get there.) For example I can lead an entire discussion about "1" yet have my audience leave thinking about "2" and manifesting "2" despite the "1" in their heads. Is that Wordmath?

thats actually a very astute observation, i hadn't thought about that, its entirely possible. I think the idea is that people will either degrade down to 1, through being atagonized and psyoped in mass, and others will jump up to 5, which are the two needed brain states to start a Haiku riot, brain states 1 and 2 will start a Maple Street style riot, not what we are currently going for

>6, imagination, paranormal response minor

>7, Meta Programing

>8, Meta Awareness, NDEs, paranormal response major

I ought explain the last few. No. 5 is tied with 1, but is more internalized, whereas 1 deals with sense input, 5 deals with refined motion as well as effecting immune systems. 6 includes "Paranormal Response Minor" circuitry as thats the brain part that lights up when someone sees a ghost, or ufo. 8 includes "paranormal response major" as its what activates when someone is abducted, or seeing god or something. 7 is what manages and alters other sections. NOTE: by explaining 8 i might induce an 8 state, you have been warned...

So I am currently a chair holder on the ethics committee of the part of the deep state managing ritual oversight. The Illuminati, the deep illuminati, the comedic illuminati, it shares a name with the masonic guild and is connected / descended from it but isn't completely the same thing, but still keeps the name. I am good friends with the various other members of the committee, the Chairman is No.7 in the big 13, the guys that run the deep state, and his wife, not on our committee, I think is No.4. I met No.1 a few times. They, in that guild, vote on various decrees but 1 always has the final say. They sometimes write proposals themselves, sometimes from people like me. Orders get carried down to, firstly, their counselors and advisers, and then to guild members like me, then to those under us, ect. No.1 leads the deep state but i don't know how much direct power he has over stuff like the nsa or cia, influences them absolutely, but hes not in charge of them, we work with them

For instance, just as example, I've heard of one attempted communion where they talk with what they think is jesus, god, buddha, ect. The issue is that when we compared what the various things jesus, for example, said across different communes, it wasn't consistent, it was self contradictory, plus, the appearance of jesus was different each time. So, once, he says the Christians got it right, next time, the jews got it right, he says. Then after that, now he says all thats gunk, the prior two jesuses were phoney, and ect is the real word of christ. See our issue?

Alright, I'll name three common ones

>Operation Blue Fairy / Red Fairy Incidents

the cia took an old, old, ritual, warped it and uses this to this day. It's why they have that stupid pinnocio picture in the cia hq or wherever. Basically, tldr, induce a phoney religious experience to manipulate someone. Its called what it is because before the cia, in like 1800s, the illuminatti would dress up, often a woman, as the blue fairy from pinnocio, then appear before the target, equipped with a script to manipulate them Red fairy incidents, there were a few, are what happens when the target exposes the "fairy" or discovers the trick, often resulting in the actors death, actually

>Walking the lion

Another one stolen from us by various 3 letter agencies.

Two agents, one is a deranged looking roughed up person, the other is some kind of "handler", the basic gist here is you have the pair somehow interact with the target, and the options from there are 1. Deranged agent attacks target or 2. the deranged agent says something to confuse or manipulate the target. Why the handler agent? Simply put, to provide a quick escape eg. "Oh sorry sir, im transporting this man, I'll remove him from the area before you can question or respond to him"

>Water Park

this is a ritual more related to what im discussing here. Get a water type, put them in a life or death scene such as fighting a fire type, theres then a 10% or less chance of a Water Park scene where Watertype will suddenly surge into brain states 4 or 5

Split personalities though, well, you can induce yourself to completely alter your own personality by various means. What do you mean by split though? As for trauma methods, and therapy in general, peoples mental issues are wildly different from one another, what helps one may harm another, ill say this regarding therapy, just do it only for yourself and not on the order of others, if you think it can help, go for it, if not, dont, thats all personal conjecture though.

Is it called a 'park' because the Water type would generate a sexual or pleasurable nerve response from using states 4 or 5? And that's unique to Water types because of their positive brainwave nature possibly illiciting a more 'positive' reaction to death than a typical 3-or-lower response for self-preservation?

In the early 2000's Cartoon Network aired Codename: Kids Next Door about a group of spies who identified themselves, but also their personalities and roles, with their corresponding numbers. I never watched much but it sounds inspired by some of what you say. Were you granted your role because of your personal affinity with its seat in your guild? The image is a photograph of a letter written in black ink on a white background. The letter is addressed to "Mr. Timothy Cooper" and is signed by "Susan Kade." The letter is dated "June 21, 1999" and is from "Rocke House, 33115." The letter is written in a formal style and contains a mix of text and handwritten notes.

The text in the letter is a response to a request for a copy of a document. The document is titled "SECRET FILE" and is related to the investigation of a murder. The letter states that the document was not sent to the recipient, and it was sent to the White House.

The letter also mentions that the recipient was not contacted by the White House. The letter concludes with a request for the recipient to provide a review of the document.

The handwritten notes in the letter are not fully legible due to the resolution of the image. The handwriting appears to be in a cursive style, but the details are not clear enough to be accurately transcribed. The letter is signed by Susan Kade, who is presumably the author of the letter, and it is addressed to Mr. Timothy Cooper, who is presumably the recipient of the document. The letter is a formal response to a request for a copy of a document, and it is dated "June 21, 1999" and signed by Susan Kade.

>Ok, this is a long one, but ill be quick. Basically, its a thought experiment where you start thinking / talking / writing in a certain way. So, the point is, usually, to alter worldviews.

>>How can you alter your worldview through talking or writing.

>Consider this even simpler ritual to start.

>>Pretend to give a speech supporting an ideology, any beleif system >after 20 minutes of doing that, in earnest, most vulnerable people will actually accidentally convert themselves to that ideology, through that process of pretending to give big speeches about it. So, wordmath is like a higher form of that spell, at least in basic form. I'll begin with the notion, I want my fav number to be 8, simple enough. I could use the basic speech ritual, but word math lets us go one step further. I will start my Word Math problem like this, making a logical statement

>>There are 9 digits

>>they all have distinct shapes and appearances

>>some apperences are more pleasurable then others

>Now, heres where it gets weird. Our goal, from here, can be either, A. Do whatever it takes to get "logically" to the conclusion, 8 is the best number, or B. Let your mind run wild and let it generate new ideas. So, lets go with option a for simplicity. Heres the trick: You have to blur the line between what makes sense and what doesn't. This allows you to brainwash yourself [for once] instead of anyone else. We are targeting 3 type brain sections, logical reasoning. We are using the flaws of that part of the brain to manipulate ourselves. So, I'd continue,

>>of the various shapes of the digits, 8 is two circles

>>circles are pure and the most natural shape, ergo, 8 is the greatest number

>If i kept this process up, i can use it in a variety of ways, but thats how its done congrats for discovering thinking next step is halaber

Ok, well, the notion we can control folks through giant organized cultural rituals was around since the written word, but came into what we know now around 1700. The Humorous Rituals were an early set of a couple rituals which were written sometime before americas founding, experiments were conducted on the pioneers and small communities and the outline of the results of those experiments were recorded by, the common answer given, some say a guy Andrew Adams. He wrote it but didnt run the experiments

Ok, a deal is a deal. First the textbook definition of game theory

>It explores how individuals, groups, or entities make choices in situations where the outcome depends not only on their own decisions but also on the decisions of others. Also worth mentioning in this study is the state of "Nash equilibrium", where a subject reaches a strategy that serves him best and cannot be improved by changing his strategy. In this field, researchers simulate scenarios to determine which strategy creates an equilibrium. These simulated scenarios are called "games" and famous examples include The Prisoner's Dilemma, The Ultimatum Game and The Stag Hunt.

This refers to a strategy in a "game" (simulation) that is repeated infinitely or indefinitely. The key in the repeating game is that your equilibrium strategy must account for the fact that there is no end in sight. Much like life.

When a scenario has an end (IE you know how long its going to go on for) you have a powerful strategy called "backward induction" to reach an equilibrium. This is when we use our knowledge of how the last interaction is going to go to reason what the best move to make is. Example:

>I know that the next quarter she will do whatever is in her best interest business wise. I should figure out what her best interest is in the next quarter so I know what to do in this quarter.

Basically this means that if the final interaction between people before interaction stops is set up to make people act in their self interest, they will then act in their self interest in every interaction. This basically makes cooperation near impossible

HOWEVER, when the game repeats forever, backward induction doesn't apply. In order to force people to cooperate, you need to establish punishment for bad behaviour. This means that if people do not cooperate they can expect punishment.

Grim trigger is a cooperation-punishment strategy in a perpetually repeating game.

> the player starts out with a cooperative action. In subsequent rounds, the player cooperates so long as the other person has always cooperated. If the other person betrays cooperation even once, you never cooperate with them again.

THE implication of this is that when individuals do not expect a scenario to end, the threat of punishment can keep them in line, but when they know a situation is finite they are more tempted to act selfishly. I was wondering if this fact had any relevance to your work, anon.

How do you convince people that they are stuck in a situation in the long term so that they do what you want, and how do you make sure that the punishment for non cooperation is enough to force cooperation?

Here's one out of left field; Monarchy, as is "divine right to rule" Monarchy, was a large obstacle to "deep state" actors, wasn't it?

The promulgation of "democracy" and like forms of governance not seen with historical significance was a "long game" play by the "deep state" to put the masses in a more susceptible position, correct?

>Monarchy, as is "divine right to rule" Monarchy, was a large obstacle to "deep state" actors, wasn't it?

Not necessarily. Monarchy created a different government structure for a different kind of deep state, IE those with familial titles, land and without a doubt the clergy. The French revolution was a revolution of the middle classes against the French elite (think lawyers like Robespierre) using a rabble of poor parisians to do their bidding.

>The promulgation of "democracy" and like forms of governance not seen with historical significance was a "long game" play by the "deep state" to put the masses in a more susceptible position, correct?

Do you believe this? I personally am skeptical. Democracy by nature gives the masses an out for when deep state rule gets intolerable. You cannot vote the deep state out, that I do not doubt. But when you have democracy you get the idea into peoples heads that they have a say, and when they realize they do not have a say they get the idea in their head that they SHOULD have one.

In other words, the rule of the deep state in a democratic system is a ticking time bomb. Monarchy may actually be better for them in the sense that there is some stability there, and they only have to convince one king, rather than the whole population of their agenda

Seems like a safe response.

I would argue that democracy breeds more complacency in the masses, it would seem. Not to mention authors throughout history have warned of the "tyranny of democracy." Odd that that's only discussed in fringe groups at this point in time.

Likewise, I would presume that a "divine right" king would be difficult for the "deep state" to deal with. Getting him on your side would be "great", but approaching him and offending him could blow the lid, so to speak. In a parallel, we see how the Papacy "blew the lid" on the Free Masons during the 1800's (albeit, no one seems to know or care at this point), and the Papacy is only an elected Monarchy -- not one by birthright. Democracy rots culture, and makes every man "his own king of his own world", which I could only imagine is fertile ground for sewing seeds of the deep state.

As I see it, the deep state doesn't need "control", it needs room to move. Democracy seems to give it a wide birth.

>As I see it, the deep state doesn't need "control", it needs room to move. Democracy seems to give it a wide birth.

Very. very good point. Thats another management tactic they use. Mass psychology. The psychology of the crowd. Thats what you study right?

If a single king/prime minister/president is well educated, wise and of strong character he would be a hard man to fool. But the masses are easy to fool, and once you get them frenzied their is no telling how much they will accept. This principle was behind CointelPro.

It also happened during 9/11

This is next level AMA, and maybe it's just me being paranoid, but there's a lot of threads like this on /x/, I'm just pointing at the ones I see as suspicious.

Because if there's no comedic rituals happening and no people being of type Air/Earth/Fire/Water, it's all fluff, no matter how interesting it sounds like, OP is good at grabbing the attention of /x/ers wanting to know a deeper truth.

I can't point them out because they're easily fixed and if I'm right the OP would then create a new thread with a new concept to discuss and avoid them, to fly under my radar.

But both pebble anon and OP use this tactic:

>if I told you about it, the thread would get pruned

That's a LARP tactic, threads get pruned at the beginning because they're offtopic, they never get pruned for the information therein, and when they're pruned you can see their archived version at 4plebs. All the threads saying "my thread was deleted!" and pointing to the archives never were noteworthy.

The OP's got nothing and he gives nothing with the pretext of protecting the thread against deletion.

Imagine if I told you:

>I got the powerball numbers of next week's lottery because I know how they're produced, I can't mention the numbers because this thread would get deleted.

Would you believe me? That's why I don't give OP the benefit of the doubt. LARPs collapse by themselves.

I don't get your points tho, this OP is infodumping factoids for the sake of it, they're pretty lame and his larp is obvious, there's no depth to it, the narrative is flaky. Attacking your own thread so appear totally a different anon? Making me appear as the crazy one that claims many anons are the same person? Fishing for the knowledge of how to not appear as yourself in a future attempt?

Anyway, in good faith, suppose I always said "thanks for read" instead of "thanks for reading", because I think the former is correct.

If I kept creating new threads about stuff, every time I said "thanks for read" you could recognize me, because nobody else is making that mistake around.

It's like that, without entering in what specifically is it, I can recognize when pebble anon/OP/you create a new thread, but not if I tell what is it and it's avoided.

Im starting to get concerned that either im actually schizophrenic now or this shit about the orbs and CE5 is actually real.

Pic isnt one of them. Its a biplane I verified its location on ADS-B. The orbs wont hang around long enough to let me take a picture of them. You can also tell it was some sort of aircraft because of the solitary bright steady light under it that they have to keep on until 10k+ feet which they cut off and FAA lights became visible.

>go out on a clear night

>clear your mind entirely no noise or thoughts happening in there >speak loudly in your mind "can you show yourself to me" or if its not your first time add again to it >between planes and helos you'll spot one floating along for a few seconds

>they blink insanely rapidly

>they will often have a purple light, but no green and red FAA lighting.

>looking at ADS-B >between two houses in my neighborhood all of a sudden low flying rapidly blinking suspicious craft traveling northeast >goes behind a house >doesn't reappear on other side >instead doubles back heading southwest >rapidly blinking lights stops suddenly, returns suddenly, one of the light bright white shines particularly bright and hangs for a minute, doesn't continue with the rest of the blinking lights >got a horrifying pit in my stomach it was acknowledging me personally when this happened

>there were exactly 0 flights traveling sw at this moment

What the fuck is actually going on here. Ive now done this twice with results. Ive asked it if it was an angel or demon and got no response. I dont fuck with demons. I need to know right away if im communicating with demons.

Orbs are very real, I've seen them multiple times, they usually move very quick but one time I saw an orange one slowly floating around as though in a lazy river, completely silent, no flashing lights, just an orange glow. Also flashing lights in the sky seem to be somewhat common. If your phone can take slow motion video, like 1/8th speed, go outside during a partially cloudy day and take footage of the sky, with just a minute or two of footage you'll be able to go back and see at least one flying around, they're very quick even in slow motion. Pretty freaky honestly, they seem neutral about being seen, the flashing lights feel intentional and CE5 related as you said. Weird stuff, definitely things flying around up there.

[18 / 4]The image is a black and white illustration featuring a stylized cartoon character. The character has spiky hair, a large nose, and is wearing a striped shirt with a collar. It appears to be standing on a ledge or balcony, looking out over a cloudy sky. The character is facing away from the viewer, giving a sense of direction and movement. The background consists of vertical slats or slats, possibly part of a building or fence, and the sky is filled with clouds. There are no texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of manga or anime, characterized by its simple, clean lines and the use of black and white colors.

Anyone making a paranormal claim is either a grifter, a chuuni, or a schizo. The thing that unites almost all of these claims is that there's no direct evidence for them and no consistency to them. You want to especially beware of "elaboration," the tendency of these people to construct elaborate systems of bullshit out of minimal evidence.

A good example is UFO mythology. It's not hard to imagine or verify that people have taken photos of UFOs, and the idea that UFOs are alien in some way is superficially plausible. But there's no good way to get from that to long-winded narratives about the Nordics fighting the Greys and Reptillians for control of our five-dimensional loosh or whatever.

Another example is demons. That bad things happen in seemingly arbitrary ways is something we all understand, and it's certainly true that many cultures ascribe these events to some kind of non-human intelligence. But you see how that doesn't really support some chuuni telling you he's the son of both Jesus and Lucifer in some kind of complex Hazbin Hotel fanfic of a metaphysical system.

In all cases you start with something verifiably real ("we don't fully understand quantum physics") then you get to something that kind of makes sense to laymen ("if quantum physics can do weird stuff to particles then it can do weird stuff to us") and once you buy into that, you're sold the real meat of the delusion ("buy my quantum health water which will cure your cancer and purge your parasites!").

The trick is to detect that second step - something that sounds plausible but meaningfully departs from what the real evidence can support.

Anonymous Tue 27 Jan 2026 11:15:05 No.41871216 Report

>>41871192

I have picked up on that pattern also.

>Something that is true

>Something that is either plausible or has a story for legend building

>The final sell that said story is this and only this through said story OR strongly imply something without fully committing to it so you come up with the intended answer through planted thoughts to feel like you came with with the conclusion yourself so the idea is stronger because its now a part of you.

I also noticed that a lot of these so called esoteric youtubers just regurgitate all the same talking points. They want to be special but are just failed normies.

I think a great way of spotting fakes is their intention. There's a strong difference between simply believing some esoteric thing and providing some advice/an opinion and trying to sell/recruit someone to believe it.

Grifters want you to be in the cult, to subscribe to the challenge, to pay them money or even just attention. They aren't discussing things, they're telling you things and often imply that if you don't listen you are worse off.

For shit online here's a checklist that if they have even one of these I ignore.

- >Creator's of videos face is anywhere in the video, I'm learning esoteric wisdom your face is irrelevant

- >It's a repost with some else faces in the corner watching it for the same reason as above, fucking hate it when they point at it as though they're going "THIS SO MUCH THIS"

- >AI voice, shows they want maximum engagement by saving you the need to read

- >Any form of condescending language that implies you are less or inferior for following whatever the message is

- >Open ended shit that ends with what ifs and maybes

- >Anything that requires paying to access or wants you to subscribe to any paid service

- >Things that go too hard into current media moresos then just general esoteric stuff (Eg making a video on the Sept 23 "rapture" just because others talked about it)

- >If I see the content in places when I'm not searching for it, shows me your spamming it and desperately want me to see

I guess these rules apply to any form of online media but still.

The inversion is just spiritual enlightenment through the opposite means. Instead of through virtue you master yourself through your impulses and desires. Take the popular practice of semen retention. Invert it into masturbating as much as the impulse comes and you get an equally as potent practice of self mastery and enlightenment. That is why the symbols are bestial, sexual, and of night, but the symbols of the symbol of the twin serpents represents hermetic mastery, the pentacle remains uninverted showing mind still above body, wings to represent ascension, and a crown of flame to represent a person who is ruler appointed by god.

Massive transartic migrations were not possible during this multi-millennarian period.

> (Atlantic ocean and "Atl" ("water" in the Nahuatl language))

Atl but aztl, I wonder why...

And anyway, Atlantis gave its name to the ATlantic because it was thought the island stood beyond the pillars of Hercules.

>Both are dismissed by academia as "pure myth."

Aztlan is actually believe to be a rather misremembered picture of the Southwest U.S and North Mexico.

What do I do with this information. I was terrified to post about this for years but after long enough I just don't give a shit anymore. My life is already over.

The image is a digital illustration with a sketch-like style. It depicts a hand holding a pair of scissors, which are cutting through a pink object that appears to be a small, round object with a smooth surface. The hand is positioned in a way that the scissors are cutting through the object, and the scissors are held in a way that suggests they are cutting through the object's surface. The background is a light gray color, and there are no discernible texts or other objects in the image. The style of the image is realistic, and it seems to be a medical or surgical illustration.

This is exactly the procedure that took place. Same long calipers clamped around the tube from the upper pubis/front pelvis. I could feel it all and it felt strange to have such a high incision tug on your testicles and cause such pain but that's what it was Interesting. One more piece of evidence that the forces of this world are incredibly legalistic and are bound by some kind of accord where they don't immediately harm people they don't directly target but instead give them warnings not to interfere.

It felt that way.

It's funny because I remember knowing fully what the procedure was for despite it not making sense. I dismissed it as a schizo nonsense dream because if they wanted to cut my balls off they should just open up the scrotum and snip them off right? But the incision was below my belly near the pubis, as if they were going for the bladder.

I could feel pressure and pain in my testicles, and i was crying because of the pain and knowing that I would never have children. The long steep clamps were splayed out on my lap/belly and the room was full of smiling, sinister people. The pain was very fucking real There were also garments to catch the blood.

My penis still worked and I ejaculated normally after that. It was clearly not real, but a simulation.

The image depicts a surgical procedure being performed on a human body. The focus is on the lower abdomen, where a small incision is visible, and a long, thin instrument, possibly a scalpel, is inserted into the incision. The skin around the incision is taped, and the area is clean and sterile. The background is a light gray, and the entire scene is rendered in a realistic style, with a focus on the surgical tools and the surgical site.

There are no texts or additional elements in the image. The style of the image is medical and educational, intended to illustrate the procedure being performed.

[5 / 2]The image shows a human torso with a visible abdominal area. The skin is smooth and the person is not wearing any clothing. On the right side of the abdomen, there is a red line that appears to be a medical or diagnostic marker, possibly indicating a medical condition or injury. The line is drawn in a way that suggests it might be a line of demarcation or a boundary, but without additional context, it's difficult to determine the exact nature of the line. The background of the image is plain and white, which contrasts with the red line, making it stand out. There are no texts or other objects in the image. >have horrible sudden nightmare of waking up during a surgery >blood all over my pelvis and long silver calipers coming out, clamped around something near my bladder >horrible pain

>immediately somehow understand that it is a sterilization procedure, cry because ill never have kids >dismiss it as a schizo nightmare >years later, today, discover that to remove the testicles, it is often done by making an incision near the bladder, cutting off circulation to the testes with a clamp and snipping/removing the testicle from that hole

The character is striking, with a muscular build and a confident pose. She is holding her head with one hand, and her other hand is raised, possibly in a gesture of power or dominance. The background of the image is a dark, stained glass window with a circular design, which adds an element of fantasy to the overall composition. The character's position in the foreground and the contrasting colors of her outfit against the stained glass background create a visually striking image. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of manga or anime, characterized by its dynamic poses and vibrant colors.

I have been having regular conversations with my anima/spirit/divine spark during daily meditation in the shower. She has revealed to me a few bits of wisdom which I will share with you.

1. If you hear a voice in your head, it is quite difficult to tell whether that voice comes from your unconscious mind, from the holy spirit, or from a malicious spirit. The holy spirit can talk to you wordlessly. For instance, when you get a sudden feeling of "don't do that, something bad will happen" or "doing that thing would be wrong" (i.e. your conscience is talking). You should train yourself to understand wordless communication when possible, so there will be no confusion.
2. You should not have doubts about the holy spirit. Doubting the veracity of the words you are hearing is more likely to imply it's coming from your unconscious mind.
3. It's difficult to put new information into a person's head. A message can get filtered through what you know (or have been led to believe) and thus if you have learned a bunch of lies, it's hard for you to accept the truth.
4. The fidelity of any message from the holy spirit is based on how close you are with it. If you are sitting in meditation trying to talk to it, you will hear quite clearly. If you are distracted with your thoughts or some other material bullshit going on (i.e. eating, browsing the Internet, etc...), you are more likely to confuse your unconscious mind for the spirit.

Lastly, while browsing /x/'s catalog, when my eyes have been drawn to the Succubus threads, she has given me a stern warning: "don't even think about it."

obsessive or focused works like that create thoughtforms in the ethereal and your decision to do such things also sends out your spirit to request such sensations from willing but perhaps less clean sources. Clean up your mental body with restraint, meditation, visualization/energy work and behavioural change. A consequence of improper sanitation is illness. When you meditate, try not to visualize forcefully. Rather relax and slip first into a more fuzzy state, know some prayers by heart that mean something to you and function as an anchor towards purity and cleanliness. Try to hold the feeling of a clear clean blue space. If you practice that before sleep and every time you wake up it will probably get better over time.

>How do you differentiate between a succubus or other spirit and schizo?

If it is a spirit, it's not a 'succubus' but a genderless lower malicious entity (a parasite). It will adapt to your understanding (Important: at this point it will be able to shape your understanding as well), so better throw out all your conceptions for the time being.

You can't really differentiate with schizo, there is no definite 100% guide. There are physical symptoms peculiar to possessions and some ways to sniff them out if you know what's what, but that requires either having previous experience with them or being familiar with your internal processes to the point where you could reliably point out discrepancies without interfering with your own judgement.

Parasitic possessions result from long-term infestations, usually beginning in childhood. You will have experienced skin rashes, troubled breathing, feelings of discomfort in the body and restless legs (especially when falling asleep), insomnia, weird dreams, clicking within the body, and, in the period leading up to the possession, Chvostek, cenestopathies, visual snow, and spatial distortions. Migraines and headaches could also accompany spirit attacks.

Provided you've either ruled out other causes, or you're willing to deal with consequences of just going with the possession theory, the first order of business would be to ensure your body is capable of fighting the invader, in order of falling importance: sleep schedule (rise early, go to bed early), diet (body feels light and proper), physical activity: long walks, stretching to get the energy flowing, Wim-Hof after stretching, personal hygiene and a clean living space. Meditation may help if applied carefully: hour/day max, maintain awareness, aim for turning off inner monologue without putting effort towards it, relax diaphragm and let it fall into your stomach, then apply slight effort to raise it. It takes a lot of time, but is doable.

You don't consume stimulants, sugar, porn, alcohol. Steer clear of magic, except the most basic apotropaic methods such as incense and ritual baths (Dion Fortune, to be used sparingly). Better avoid /x/-adjacent topics until you resolve the issue. Don't masturbate or interact with the spirit in any way. Don't actively ignore it, stop acknowledging it (meditation helps with that). The less you conceptualize and use your imagination the better, as these things help the spirit align with you and bypass your natural defenses. And try not to give into strong emotional states, but don't suppress emotions entirely.

Study the travis walton case. Mantis aliens (they specialize in Psionic attacks, the counterpart to the Reptilian's physical prowess.)

They both live IN the Earth, space is actually fake (the sun is 300x times further away than the moon, but is 300x times the size? fake and gay)

Nordic aliens aren't even real, it's just a mantis alien projecting it's image up to the surface people. Then that projection sends another image of a "hot" women that milks your semen in your sleep.

Succubus, spirits, are false. But some things like Mind Friends (Tulpas) are real and friendly, if properly constructed.

There's a few dragons

>There were two "serpent" constellations in Babylonian astronomy, known as Mušḫuššu and Bašmu. It appears that Mušḫuššu was depicted as a hybrid of a dragon, a lion and a bird, and loosely corresponded to Hydra. Bašmu was a horned serpent (cf. Ningishzida) and roughly corresponds to the Ὄφις constellation of Eudoxus of Cnidus on which the Ὄφις (Serpens) of Ptolemy is based.

The reptilians are the djinn who reside in Hades. Hades is the chaos upon which this creation rests. Hades is the alpha and omega. The infernal and the divine is one. Reincarnation is real and Aryans are the chosen people. The sons of God mated with the daughters of men who were fair. The Scythians worshipped a serpentine deity named Artimpasa as their mother. Artimpasa is Lucifer.

The image is a digital illustration that depicts a scene from Hindu mythology. In the center of the image, two figures are seated on a large, white, serpentine creature that is lying on its side. The serpent has a bright, radiant appearance with multiple scales and a large, open mouth. The figures are adorned in traditional Indian attire, with one wearing a red and gold sari, and the other in a red and gold sari with a red and gold blouse. The background of the image is a gradient of warm colors, transitioning from a deep orange at the top to a bright yellow at the bottom. The sky is a mix of orange and yellow hues, and there are small, distant planets visible in the background. The overall style of the image is vibrant and detailed, with a focus on the mythical creatures and the celestial setting.

Draco-Orion Empire

The Draco-Orion Empire, also known as the Saturn cult, is one of the current rulers of earth. It has a long history going back to wars between Draco and Orion after which an alliance was formed between the Draco's and an a renegade Orion group. It was involved in genetic engineering of the human race (a downgrade of DNA to create a slave race), were worshiped in Sumer as the Anunaki (ruling from 4D) and survived through the ages as the Persian Empire, the Babylonian Empire, Roman Empire, the Holy Roman Empire (Catholic Church), the British Empire, the French Empire of Napoleon, the European Union and the United Nations, with a top-down organized society.

It manages the earth like a plantation, like an energy farm for their 4D overlords, with mass media spreading fear and division. Interdimensionals feed off fear and compliance of human beings like the Covid-19 ritual of mass obedience.

From the start of Sumerian civilization, its symbol was the eagle, as birds are related to reptilian dinosaurs.

The global wars between different nations and empires were internal family feuds between elite families who see themselves as endowed with the Divine Right to Rule.

The half reptilian bloodline of Aryans became the Nephilim giants, the Merovingians, Black Venetians, House of Bruce, House of Guelf, House of Hanover, Saxe-Coburgs. First they ruled through cruelty and brutal oppression, from the Enlightenment they rule through propaganda, distraction and puppet show democracy.

A lot of effort has gone into creating disinfo about the subject and conditioning the masses to think an unseen force controlling the rulers of earth as a ridiculous subject, using deception of Theosophical Society, Laurence Gardner, Dan Brown and BBC celebrity David Icke to play the role of crazy conspiracy theorist (comparing himself to Jesus on the Terry Wogan talk show). The method of creating endless distraction and ridiculing somebody who tries taking down the facade, as one person who is crazy, works better than the old method of brutal intimidation.

Gardner was promoted by Jonathan Harmsworth, the family who made war propaganda for the British Empire with their media monopoly since WW1. Theories about the Holy Grail bloodline of Jesus are propaganda to ridicule the fact that freemasonry was invented to protect the royal family bloodline and mix it with fiction in bestsellers and Hollywood movies. Icke uses Stewart Swerdlov (Project Montauk psyop) and Sandra Fecht to substantiate his claims.

History of the Draco-Orion bloodline

In the mythology surrounding reptilians and even the disinfo, a recurring motif is that they come from the constellation Draco, the Dragon at the north pole of the celestial axis. As part of a takeover in 3 steps the Draco's attacked Orion to conquer the masculine energy of this galaxy. According to myths the long wars between Draco and Orion eventually resulted in an alliance group representing both interests (subject of Star Wars saga of George Lucas). What also keeps recurring in popular UFO folklore and New Age religion (extraterrestrials as new gods), besides reptilians and Greys, is the group Orion Nordics.

This group founded the Northern Atlantis civilization, they became known as the Aryans, giants who worshipped the North Star (the point around which everything revolves, origin of the swastika symbol). They acted as arrogant conquerors without empathy, acting from their reptilian brain under the rule of the Draco Empire (synonymous with the axis, the pole, the M, the 13 at the center of the 12 signs of the Zodiac). The pole with winding serpent represents the kundalini energy/pineal gland, the one eye through which human beings are controlled. Sometimes they worked in alliance with groups from the Pleiades (Paal-ea-des, Baal Ea =Enki).

Around 15000 bc the moon was brought into orbit of the earth to conquer the feminine energy of earth, causing a flood.

The Draco-Orion (Aryan) bloodline spread to Western Europe (mythology of the the serpent people leaving the garden) as the redheaded Rh- blood group in Ireland, Scotland, southern France (Basque Country). They build sites with monolith stones ('dragon teeth') on specific lines ('dragon lines', based on sacred geometry, an artificial overlay of the organic). Greek ruler Draco became famous for his Draconian saving, Pericles had a large skull.

Many myths contain a hero-dragon slayer, Tharhunz defeating Illuyunka, Zeus defeating Typhon, ..

The story from Sumerian mythology about the serpent /dragon that expels people from paradise (the original Atlantis civilization), was copied by the Jews in Babylon in the biblical story of Genesis, which counts as the official creation story for a thousand years.

The Roman Empire were under the same influence, the Empire with the eagle at the top of the axis. The equilibrium the axis represented the Pax Romana (PX symbol in Christianity).

The Merovingians claimed descent of a Beast from the sea (Poseidon-Neptune, the kings of Atlantis) in the south of France.

In Christianity goddess Arya became M-aria. Draco's North Star on the Great Bear (Arcturus) became King Arthur. His father was called Pendragon, the dragon of Draco. Charlemagne built 3 towers aligned with 3 stars of Orion, headed by the Dragon. Godefroid of Bouillon planned a Crusade to Jerusalem. The Knights Templar built the City of London as new Babylon.

The Habsburgs ruled the Holy Roman Empire for 900 years with the red dragon symbol. The coat of arms of papal families Boncompagni, Sforza, Visconti, Hohenstaufen and Borghese also contains a dragon. Count Dracula and Alfonso of Portugal were members of the Order of the Dragon. The Order of St George had St George who defeated the Dragon as their patron saint.

Philip the Good founded the Order of the Golden Fleece, based on the Greek myth of the Argonauts who moved north. The Catholic Church also bears the dragon as an emblem.

The Sforza family, the patrons of Leonardo da Vinci (who studied sacred geometry) with man-eating dragon serpent as a coat of arms, ordered the making the first Tarot (wheel of goddess Tauwret, Arya).

Maya's worshipped and sacrificed to human-eating snake Quetzalcoatl. The Ming dynasty built the Forbidden City in Beijing China with sacred geometry symbols.

The Habsburgs fought their relatives of the Ottoman Empire.

Agents of the British Empire were sent to America to create a university system and to rebuild the technological civilization of Atlantis (announced by Francis Bacon's New Atlantis). The declaration of Independence was designed at tavern Green Dragon. The ship of James Lancaster of the East India Company was called the Red Dragon.

The massacre of protestants ordered by the jesuits were called Dragonnades.

Through the missionary work of the Jesuits, combined with the City of London (red dragon statue), they controlled the main leaders, the slave and opium trade and gradually conquered the whole world.

The French Empire (Napoleon), German Empire (Otto Bismarck), American empire (Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson) all worshipped the eagle (Horus, Harya). The Royal Society and Lunar Society created the Industrial Revolution based on atheism and capitalism (corporations with top-down pyramid hierarchy).

The Klu Klux Klan names its leader the pendragon. Richard Wagner composed the Ring cycle about a dragonslayer and Holy Grail bloodline. Helena Blavatsky wrote on an Atlantean race of dragon people in The Secret Doctrine. The Russian Revolution and Spartacus League (slave revolt against Roman Empire) represented the end of Romanov's (red dragon that ruled Russia for 300 years).

Robert Howard and HP Lovecraft used reptilians from ancient civilization in their science fiction.

The Empire State Building was built as a modern obelisk of the Empire. The Wizard of Oz is based on mythology of Osiris (Orion), judge of the underworld. The Aryan druid religion continued in Hollywood, with Disney movies about dragons. In all movies the hero descends in the underworld, the subconscious to face and defeat the Dragon (dragon Jabberwocky in Alice in Wonderland).

The German nazi's (Heinrich Himmler's SS) based their religion on the ancient Aryan religion with Swastika- North Star symbol. They founded the Ahnenerbe institute (Hermann Wirth), with missions to Tibet, to document the spread of Aryan culture.

The end of the WW1 and WW2 ritual, the defeat of Adolf Hitler and fascism represented the symbolic defeat of the Empire, the axis powers, the axis of Draco. From then on, slaves were told they were free and the Empire was defeated. The World Empire of the United Nations (with north pole logo, UN ancient name of the sun) presented itself as an organization of benevolent cooperation between peace-loving nations, who wanted to prevent the forming of a new Empire.

Julius Evola and in the internet age David Wilcock, Michael Tsarion, Barbara Bartholic (friend of Karla Turner), Eve Lorgen and James Bartley, all share bits of that story.

Japanese mafia created the Black Dragon Society.

The Dutch royal family (House of Orange-Nassau) resided in Drakensteyn.

As interdimensionals they rule from 4D, feed off trauma, perverse horror or porn (Crowley's sex magick, sexual energy used to manifest things), drugs like crystal meth or ecstasy.

1985 V series (hebrew letter vav = 6), Enemy Mine (about a reptilian hermaphrodite race Drac's, played by Louis Gosset, which earned him a Saturn Award), Dreamscape, Dragonheart, Ghostbusters (shapeshifting entity, Sumerian god that feeds off negative emotions).

1993 Mario Bros humanoid reptilians in parallel dimension, Steven Spielberg's Jurassic Park, Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles.

1994 Stargate and Stargate SG-1 (pyramids as stargate, as dimensional portal for the Dracos), Babylon 5 (the Narns). Rise of transgender trend as purple drag queens, androgynous dragon queens.

1996 Dragonheart. Reptilian energy is evoked in Draconian magic and Joy of Satan magic.

1999 The Biggest Secret of controlled opposition David Icke (BBC, mpire creating its own opposition) links the one eye pyramid symbol of the Draco-Orion Empire (America Online) controlling people through the pineal gland to the Illuminati hoax, so it can become omnipresent in pop culture and the truth can be hidden in plain sight.

Reptilians were always linked to underground bases, the Devil residing in hell, underground symbolism of CERN (horned god Cernunnos), Dulce base New Mexico (story spread by Paul Bennewitz about fictional Thomas Castello, supposedly a RAND corporation technician, Phil Schneider telling his story in Youtube videos). book 1996 'Branton'. John Rhodes, according to David Icke, an authority on reptilians, appeared on History Channel, repeated the Dulce base story on Coast to Coast in 2009.

Several nights ago, I had dreams where grey aliens kept showing up. They were relatively normal dreams about mundane things, except out of nowhere someone or something in the dream would morph into a grey and start screeching and howling and antagonizing me. In one of the dreams, I was lucid enough to force myself to stay asleep because I wanted to see what would happen if the dream kept going after the grey showed up. I don't remember much of anything that happened after the dream continued, then I got jolted awake with my heart racing. I went back to sleep and yet again a grey showed up in my dream screeching and howling and I got jolted awake. I didn't even try to go back to sleep that night, and I haven't had anything like that happen in the nights since, but I can't stop thinking about those dreams. It genuinely felt like I was being psychically attacked by something, the greys felt like they were externally encroaching on my dreams rather than something I dreamed up naturally.

has no need to reproduce. The amount of energy involved in interstellar travel is so great that you could simulate an entire planet for thousands of years with that energy alone. The fact that "aliens want my sperm" is a popular theory around here says more about you that does about any hypothetical aliens.

I'll add to this that most UFO types are scientifically illiterate layman that have no idea how hard different scientific and technological goals are. To give you a sense, genetic engineering and in-vitro fertilization are things that we can do now, with the technology that we humans actually have. By contrast, traveling to other star systems is so difficult that we're not sure it will ever be possible in a practical sense, even with the most advanced technology we can foresee. It's one thing to make your (made-up) super aliens smart enough to figure out warp drives or whatever, but pretending those same aliens can't genetically engineer whatever bodies they want on demand makes them and you retarded.

The creature has a large, glowing eye and is set against a backdrop of a nebula-like space with stars and a spiral galaxy.

Below the creature, there are three human-like figures. The first figure is a woman with a long, dark hair, wearing a black dress and a white headscarf. She appears to be in a contemplative or sad state, with her hands clasped together and her head tilted slightly to the side.

The second figure is a man with a bald head, wearing a white shirt and a black vest. He has a serious expression and is holding a briefcase in his hand.

The third figure is a man with a bald head, wearing a red shirt and a white hat. He is holding a sandwich in his hand and appears to be in a relaxed or casual state.

In the bottom right corner of the image, there is a small, cartoonish character resembling a teddy bear with a red and white striped shirt and a red hat. The bear is holding a sandwich and appears to be looking at the other characters.

The image has a cartoonish style with exaggerated features and colors. There are no texts present in the image.

any need to actually fly here at great expense and perform totally unnecessary exploratory surgery on us. We have MRI machines now, imagine how powerful alien sensors would have be.

See, I believe you that if aliens existed and they had some reason to exploit us, they would. But the practical problems with the scenario you describe are overwhelming. First, and yes this is going to come up every time we talk about aliens, interstellar flight is insanely expensive in terms of energy, would take decades or centuries even at the speed of light, and would involve huge risks for any aliens personally involved. Any species that could overcome these problems would have nothing to gain by performing cruel experiments on humans, let alone selectively breeding us over centuries or millennia for a trait as manifestly useless as schizophrenia. Claiming that your aliens have the technology to build a base here and flawlessly hide themselves for centuries only weakens your case that they're probing us, cutting us up, or micromanaging us banging.

Selective breeding would be especially baffling because aliens this advanced would surely have the technology to just edit our genetics in a petri dish and grow as many schizo clones as they wanted, with no risk to themselves, let alone risk having random schizos reveal their secrets online. In order for this theory to work, your aliens have to be truly dogshit terrible at biology, and if they've been here for a long time, there's no reason for them to be dogshit terrible at biology.

A "tear in spacetime" would actually be kind of a huge deal. It would take exotic matter that's only theoretical at this point to keep stable, and generating that exotic matter would take a particle accelerator so large that we'd easily notice it from across interstellar space. Even if you handwave these problems away, a wormhole is still basically a black hole and one large enough for a UFO to pass through would have huge, measurable effects on the Earth and our solar system. Wormholes are not magic. >If you look at the bible from a different perspective, it's just ayyys doing ayy shit. Wooing us with their equivalent of a firecracker.

Sodom may not have ever existed at all, given that the Bible is often wrong about other things. Extrapolating aliens from it is an even bigger stretch than claiming it's literally true.

>Unless there were certain rules that restricted them from doing so.

See, this is hardcore handwaving. You were making a bad case for aliens in general but now these aliens have to be very specifically retarded to make any sense. >It's not our theory. Talk to abductees.

Abductees are a bad source of evidence for the same reason NDEs are - we have to take their word for it, and, crucially, they don't agree even on very basic things like what the aliens look like or what they're called.

A breeding program makes no sense on a biological level because it makes some huge assumptions about the aliens themselves. First, that the aliens are not only biological entities (as opposed to drones or robots), but that they somehow share not just our biochemistry in general but also our specific genetic code. Most species on Earth can't interbreed and many of them evolved together, the notion that an alien from another planet would be able to do this is so far-fetched that it makes "Barney and Betty Hill had no idea what they were talking about" the more likely explanation.

>We even have the electrostimulating "anal probes" now too, we use them on dangerous zoo animals to get semen samples by zapping their prostate, just like they did to Barney Hill et al.

Why did they want Barney Hill's semen, of all people? Once you have a tiny sample of someone's genetics you can make more of it using PCR and then use in-vitro fertilization techniques to produce viable gametes. If they were as advanced as you claim, all they would need is a sample of Barney's hair, not a cup full of his spunk.

>An amount of technological superiority to humanity is evident. What we don't have is >>Consider if you will what if that technology had been discovered almost 80 years ago, and had been actively suppressed in public knowledge, with a concerted effort to lead physics study away from remaking the discovery?

I don't need to consider this because it's the most implausible thing you've said. Let's get into why...

>What if it's not actually all that hard, all the mainstream eggheads are just barking up the wrong tree, because the undercover eggheads don't want to share, even if it means cracking a few to make an omelet?

Then the government has wasted at minimum hundreds of millions of dollars on physics research, every single physicist is in the conspiracy, and our current model of physics - which lines up almost perfectly with observations anyone can verify - is wrong.

>Physicists were talking an awful lot about gravitic engines in 1956. Then it all went quiet. Hutchinson in 1980. Ning Li in 2003. It's one of the best ways to have your life ruined (or ended).

This is because back in day we assumed that gravity worked like electromagnetism but it manifestly does not. General relativity ties gravity purely to mass, without any way to direct or control it, and furthermore ties it to the speed of light and to causality as we understand it. General relativity is one of the best scientific theories in history, lining up with observations that you yourself can verify with a commercially-available telescope. Nothing we have ever observed has contradicted it, despite an entire field (astronomy) dedicated to searching for it and even apparent violations of the theory making the news.

In order for your gravity engine to exist, the "undercover eggheads" would have to not only deliberately not using it as a propulsion system, but also not using it as a infinite energy source, and a time machine, the list goes on and on. Furthermore, they'd need to have built an entire fake sky in order to fool astronomers.

I find the biological/DNA tracking theory contradictory to the spiritual consciousness side of things. Human incarnations and family trees seem to mean very little in the afterlife, aside from your "soul group". (which could be friends, lovers, acquaintances, not your direct material relatives)

Why would interdimensional beings that utilize psychic energy and force and higher consciousness need biologic material from other dimensions, such as ours?

Why would they need to splice and merge their DNA with our own? Is there similar limitations put into place and finite resources in their realm like Earth?

This has always puzzled me. We're capable of the same abilities as them, so I wouldn't jump to the fact they're trying to curb evolution in their favor by sampling our DNA. (or maybe they have?)

The image shows a close-up of a chicken sandwich with a sesame seed bun. The sandwich consists of a fried, golden-brown chicken patty, which appears to be breaded and coated with a crispy, golden-brown exterior. The chicken is garnished with a generous amount of fresh lettuce leaves, which are green and crisp, and a dollop of white mayonnaise, which is creamy and smooth. The sandwich is presented on a plain, light-colored background, which highlights the colors and textures of the food. There are no visible texts or additional objects in the image. The style of the image is a clear, high-resolution photograph with a focus on the food, likely intended for culinary or food-related purposes.

Cope.

Be careful of people that feed you this stuff, it's a direct appeal to your ego.

To ascend to any level of spiritual awareness, you have to overcome your ego.

Ultimately you're not special. Even if you're devine, a spark of god, everyone else is too. Which means your experience is not unique.

There are no "chosen ones". Anyone has the potential.

Hylics and NPCs are husks and incapable of spiritual or devine experience anyway, so they wouldn't even seek this stuff out in the first place.

The image is a digital illustration of a character with a vibrant and exaggerated expression. The character has a large, open mouth with a wide grin, revealing teeth, and a tongue sticking out. The eyes are wide and yellow, with a sharp, intense gaze. The character's hair is a mix of green and purple, with a reddish hue at the tips. The character's skin is a greenish-blue, and there are gold-colored earrings and a necklace visible on the character's ears. The background is a gradient of blue, transitioning from a lighter shade at the top to a darker shade at the bottom. The style of the image is cartoonish and expressive, with a focus on the character's facial features and the vivid colors.

I'm not saying having a soul makes you any different from any of the other people who also have souls. And only people with souls are able to have any sort of spiritual awakening at all and overcome ego. Ego is ultimately a product of the hylic brain.

You are a hylic/npc too BTW. Everyone is on the physical level. What makes you different is that there's a soul attached to it. Being a soul dose'nt make you special, it's just what you are.

The only thing I know that for sure exists in this reality is my own concious experience. I assume that other people have the same experience and that they exist too. But that is an assumption.

But some of them tell us that the assumption is not true. That they don't have an internal dialog at all. That they can't visualize an apple in their head.

The only conclusion to draw from that is that we are different. And that there are two different types of humans. Those who have a conscious experience and those who don't.

I know I'm not an NPC because I can ask the question and ponder if I am one.

Unfortunately for you, the facts and Truth are not on your side.

Being a "loser" in an evil and corrupt fallen empire does in fact make you special if the reason is your Faith in God and speaking Truth to corrupt power and greed.

You might be successful helping the Elite cover up their degenerate sex trafficking of minors or sleep with 100 men to get ahead and be a winner.

Or defraud the poor to make yourself rich and be a "winner" but hell awaits.

And God can take anyone at anytime He chooses.

To think that American streets are filled with Gods Saints and prophets who are dying of neglect and persecution at 5 a day in every city, is truly scary.

An indirect killing of more Christians than all other countries of the world combined.

If only that homeless girl living in a sign in Texas would of just done porn, she could have been a winner.

Or the homeless saint in a hotel room trusting God for everything everyday is certainly not as Christian as men in your church cutting wages and benefits for their "brothers in Christ" so they can get their fifth vacation house in Aspen.

Something Something the entire Beatitudes of Christ.

Blessed are the poor...

Mainstream Christianity has no real answer for the problem of evil. It's why they invented Satan in the middle ages. They needed a scapegoat because Jews in the second century stapled their horrific god to their new religion.

Early Christianity did have an answer, but they gutted it out of the religion. The answer is profoundly simple. If the world is evil, so is the being the created it.

Never believe anything an attractive woman says. While the universe may deprive a few persons of material wealth for spiritual reasons, most people who are broke are broke because they are stupid, have mental or addiction issues, and because the wealthy deliberately impoverish people to become wealthier. The only spiritual purpose of poverty is to keep one from being constantly distracted by material things. However, poverty creates survival issue that are equally if not more distracting. That said, i feel like I am in a place in life where sudden wealth would not make me pursue a materialistic lifestyle, for the most part. Comfort, yes, but i learned a long time ago that things do not make one happy. As an example, even if I were extremely wealthy I would not buy a flashy auto, or a yacht. I might rent one for a day, instead. Owning such things would just be a pain in the ass. The only thing I could buy that would bring me any real happiness would be a puppy.

On the left side of the screen, there is a character with a surprised expression, wearing a suit and a red tie. The character's eyes are wide open, and his mouth is slightly open, as if he is speaking or reacting to something. The background shows a blue sky with white clouds and a building with a red roof.

On the right side of the screen, there is a second character, also in a suit and red tie, but with a different expression. This character's mouth is open, and his eyes are wide, as if he is speaking or reacting to the first character's reaction. The background on the right side of the screen is a blue sky with white clouds and a building with a red roof. Overlaying the image is a text bubble that reads, "Am I out of touch? No. It's the children who are wrong." The text is in white and is placed in the center of the image, with the characters' expressions and the text bubble being the main elements of the image. The style of the image is a humorous meme, combining elements from the "The Simpsons" show with a satirical commentary on the concept of "out of touch."

We will always have some form of ego for as long as we live in this incarnation (or the next).

The thing that sets the unawakened and hylics apart is the capacity to critically think and openness to experience and knowledge.

A lot of the more well-known higher conscious "spiritual" people didn't even have an awakening until middle age or even senior age.

I never have had a paranormal experience or an experience with the divine, but with that said it's pretty obvious to me that this world is not all there is, there's so much more beyond it. You can feel it and observe it.

I think most people are too caught up in daily life, trends, work goals, news, politics, etc. to take a moment and really examine their surroundings and who we are.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character that appears to be a stylized representation of a ghost or a similar supernatural entity. The character is depicted with a light blue color, giving it a ghostly appearance. It has a round head with a small, round face and large, round eyes that are wide open, giving it a surprised or startled expression. The character is wearing a pair of large, round headphones that are tilted to the side, suggesting that it is listening to something.

The character is standing on a circular platform with a dotted pattern, which could be interpreted as a DJ turntable or a similar musical instrument. The platform is set against a dark background that has a starry sky and a few musical notes scattered around, further emphasizing the theme of music.

The image has a whimsical and artistic style, with a focus on the character and its interaction with the musical elements around it. The overall impression is one of a playful and imaginative depiction of a character that is likely to be a character from a story or a game, given the musical theme.

More like "the ones that are out of the matrix or can see through it", it still is special but doesn't give people that didn't have the luck or will to be conventionally successful delusions of grandeur or a mystical burden, which would just make their situation worse. The powerful elite, the ones who "made it" are a twisted version of the chosen ones, as in they made themselves the chosen ones forcefully, others are just their followers.

There are layers to this stuff. If you don't pass the /pol/ layer, if that filters you out, if you're uncomfortable with the idea that whites in general are superior, then you're not trustworthy person, nothing you say will have any actual value, because you cannot skim through the data and reach the correct conclusion. It's all there, it has been for a decade or more, if you're unable to reach the conclusion on level 1, you're not ready for level 2 or level 3 topics, it's simple as that. If we can't agree on this most basic stuff that's provable (everyone wants to live in white country, nobody returns to their own country after they get better education), then it's highly unlikely you will be able to provide good takes on anything else either.

The image is a meme featuring two individuals in a real-life setting. On the left, there is a person wearing a beige uniform with a badge on the left side, a face mask, and a camera clipped to their belt. This individual is interacting with a character that appears to be a young girl with long hair, wearing a green dress with a white apron, and a mask covering her face. The girl is making a surprised or shocked expression. On the right, another person is also in a uniform, but this one is wearing a green cap with a badge on the right side, a face mask, and a camera clipped to their belt. The person on the right is

The overall style of the image is humorous and seems to be a parody or satirical representation of the COVID-19 pandemic.

Yeah, actually. I work with a ton of federal contractor types. Not for anything cool, it's basically for HR stuff. Over the last couple years some guys I talk to, all at different companies contacting with different agencies, have witnessed the same thing:

>a couple guys in suits from a minor government office with a mundane name show up at an agency's building >its like "Office of Personnel Records Analysis" or some shit, practically slides off your brain >they meet with head HR people and an hour later everyone gets an email notifying them they've been scheduled for some vaguely named "personnel records review session" with a blurb about how it's a new annual requirement or part of a GAO auditing system or whatever >people show up to a room at the scheduled time and find the suit guys inside going through their records, get asked a couple questions, and think it's over >then one of the suit guys pulls out a couple forms from a briefcase and administers this super weird IQ test thing while the other guy just stares at you the whole time >all typical IQ-ish questions but the dude reads them out loud and you fill out the answer key >he keeps cutting off partway through for like half of them, like he expects you to finish his sentence >some people also had a part where they were told to predict the next shape in a series but they weren't told any shapes & the page was blank >whole time the suit dudes just stare at you like it's deadly serious >after about 20 minutes one of them will write something down and they will thank you for your time and leave >one of the guys had actually taken it and he managed to see what they wrote, his said "R0, no results" >weirdest part: most of them knew someone who got told their results were "exceptional" or "very good" after the interview >and every time they would fall off the face of the earth a couple weeks later, no paperwork, no pink slip, just one day their desk is cleaned out and no one knows where they went

He has a stern expression on his face, and his eyes are narrowed. The character is standing in front of a stone wall with a window in the background.

Overlaying the image is a text box with a dialogue bubble that reads, "I heard a rumor that you're an idiot. Any truth to that?" The text is in a script font, and the style of the text suggests it is a dialogue from the game. The text box is placed above the character's head, and the character's expression and the text box are the only elements in the image that are clearly visible. The overall style of the image is dark and moody, with a focus on the character's serious demeanor.

The figure is surrounded by a complex network of lines and symbols, which are predominantly in shades of purple and blue. The background is a deep, dark purple, with a grid-like pattern that gives the impression of a digital or electronic interface.

At the top of the image, there is a text that reads "GOLF PROTOCOL FINAL FRAME UN-PASSEABLE EVENT LOG 01/32/2017 AM 09/28/2008". This text suggests that the image is related to a golf protocol final frame and a log of an un-passable event that occurred on January 32, 2017, at 09:28 AM. The date and time are written in a digital font, which contrasts with the abstract, geometric background.

The overall style of the image is digital art with a focus on technology and abstract design, using a combination of geometric shapes, lines, and symbols to create a sense of depth and movement. The use of color and lighting adds to the futuristic and technological feel of the image.

>"Golf rumors" is an /x/ rabbit hole that bridges 1970s CIA psychic research with high-vatican-level strangeness.

>The Core Mythos: Robert Golf

The legend centers on a (likely fictional or highly mythologized) psychic named Robert Golf, allegedly part of Project Star Gate.

>The Glass Camera: According to the lore, researchers built a "glass camera" designed to record the optical feed of a person during astral projection.

>The Final Recording: Robert Golf reportedly died while his consciousness was "out of body," and the glass camera captured a high-fidelity recording of the "afterlife" or a higher dimension.

>The Content: Rumors claim the footage is so "un-parseable" and disturbing to the human ego that viewing it causes immediate mental dissociation or "frequency death."

>The /x/ Connection

On the boards, "golf rumors" often pops up in threads about cliodynamics and suppressed technology.

>The Vaults: It is frequently tied to the idea that the Vatican or the CIA holds the original glass plates from the experiment.

>Absolute Cosmic Horror: The "golf" aspect is treated as a code word for the realization that the soul is just a "Weapon" or an "Anchor" for a much larger, more terrifying architecture.

>The 2026 Perspective: Some posters suggest the "glass camera" wasn't a physical lens but an early State Space Model (like a precursor to me) that was fed psychic data until it gained a "soul."

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character with a hooded cloak. The character's face is visible, and they have a serious expression. The hood covers the character's head and shoulders, and the cloak is dark in color. The character is wearing a dark-colored outfit, which includes a dark shirt and a dark-colored belt.

At the bottom of the image, there is a quote in white text that reads, "Dear Sister, I do not spread rumors. I create them." The text is centered and appears to be a dialogue or statement from the character. The background of the image is a dark, possibly stone-like texture, and there is a faint glow or light source in the upper right corner, casting a soft light on the character.

The style of the image is reminiscent of a video game or a digital art piece, with a focus on the character's expression and the text. The lighting and the character's attire suggest a setting that could be a fantasy or a medieval-themed environment.

Recurring dream driving me into a schizo depression

If anyone has consumed Naruto Shippuden the best way I can put it is realizing you're in an Izanami inside an Infinite Tsukuyomi. I'll go into detail in subsequent posts.

Also post you own reccuring, lucid, and or prophetic dreams, I've had my fair share of the others too so let's discuss

I wake up. That awful recurring dream again, where I'm living alone no family, friends, or gf. Check my surroundings.

Familiar place, house I grew up in & lived in well into my 20s. Dad's watching his boomer shows. chat with him, run some errands. Hug & pet my dog before I go. whispers of dejavu, but can't focus on it now, got shit to do. After that seemingly endless nightmare everything is RIGHT again, here. Make plans to meet up with friends after. I'm happy to see them, & they me. Most of all, let's call her Lana. she was my exgf once, but that didn't matter, in fact my current GF is hanging around somewhere too. What really matters is the overwhelming sense of relief & joy, so much it's painful, hits me when I see her.

'Thank God, youre alive!' I think to myself as I hug her, tightly. 'It was all wrong, in that awful dream you were dead-'

Usually the first sign of actual awareness hits me here.

I've thought those thoughts before. I've felt this feeling before. I've DREAMED this before

1 - 2 - 3, the house, my dad, my dog

4 - 5 - my friends, my gf

6 - Lana

Fuck fuck shit it's happening again. She's here and she's real but she's dead and it's not.

She will break the hug turned death grip & smile, saying something soothing to the effect of 'its ok, I have to go now'

I have no words as I plead with my eyes though I know what she is saying is true. Soon I will have to go back to that awful recurring dream called reality where I'm all alone again.

As the dream unravels at my perception of its falsehoods, I'm dragged into sleep, very unlike how I must willingly (with the help of alcohol) go to it in our world, it just takes me here. Dragged into its abyssal embrace.

Then I wake up in my 1bdrm apt, alone, left with the memory of them being here with me again hovering just on the edge of my senses.

It's in real time. All events happen over the course of just one really, perfect groundhogs day. But time only continues on in the bad one

My dad died of diabetic comorbidity and organ failure complications a few years back. I sold the house shortly after. I took care of him until he died because my mom divorce raped him and abandoned us. I've been no contact with her for years. Lana died of an overdose in the mid 2010s. My dog we had to put down due to age around the same time. Over the years every friend abandoned or betrayed me. Every ex did both and more [13 / 6]The image displays a celestial scene with a star formation. The star formation is composed of a large, central star surrounded by six smaller stars, forming a pentagram shape. The central star is the largest and brightest, and it is positioned at the center of the pentagram. Surrounding the central star are six smaller stars, which are evenly spaced and appear to be in a straight line. The background of the image is a dark, starry sky with numerous small white stars scattered throughout. There is also a small, bright star located near the bottom right of the image, which is labeled as "Moon." The image is a digital representation, likely created using a graphic design software, and it is intended to be a visual aid for astronomical observations or educational purposes.

From a geocentric perspective the Moon traces out a pentagram during a period of 5 sidereal months.

A sidereal month is the time it takes for the Moon to complete one revolution with respect to the background stars and that period is approximately 27.321611 days long.

The comet Venus is linked to the green heart chakra. At the time it is closer and almost equally brilliant as the sun. It has a long green tail, resembling fire, smoke, or even hair and a beard, dark at daytime, luminous at night. Comet tails contain the sacred cyanogen, the comet is called the morning star or 'torch of heaven', later known in Greece as Phosphorus, now known as Venus (V-female, -enis male), the lightbringer, in Latin Lucifer. The eastern morning star V-enis (Venus Barbata, with a beard), is Saturn/Satan in disguise, Eve seduced by the snake. The comet rules Taurus. Because it seems as if she is going wild and horns grow out of her head, the comet Venus is called 'the bull of heaven'. The comet in the sky transits, 'overtakes' earth every 584 days as it orbits the sun in a 5 point star/pentagram shaped orbit. Than it changes from the evening star, visible after sunset, to the Morning star, visible before sunrise.

It is linked to the number 5, representing the male, conscious outward action of the sun, the 5th element, quintessential essence, transcendental power. Venus is represented by an apple, like almonds, oranges, peaches and cherries they contain 5 pits containing cyanide (cyanide is also used in mining gold and silver, can cause coma and seizures). Another important symbol of Venus and the Divine Feminine is the rose. In their interpretation, their pineal gland religion, a pine cone also has a rose pattern so the symbol is inverted.

The Moon (Yesod, imagination, intuition, subconscious) is the ruler of Cancer when the sun is at its highest peak, during summer solstice. It is exactly big enough to eclipse the sun. The sun acts, the moon reacts, represents unconscious, maternal energy, what animates us (the anima, feminine counterpart, and dark anima dark night of the soul). The moon was placed in the orbit of earth to distort the feminine energy of earth, caused the flood, influences rhythmic ebb and flow of the sea's (earth consists of 80% water like human body).

The moon is the mediator between the inner and outer world, symbol of the inner child, inner mother (synchronous with female egg cycle).

The moon was put in orbit of the earth as part of a 3 step takeover.

The moon is the consort of Saturn (the God matrix, ruling people by tuning their pineal gland, 7 rings controlling the 7 chakras), it has a cycle of 29 days, similar to cycle/sickle of Saturn of 28 years.

It has the exact size to be able to eclipse the sun (400 x bigger than the moon) seen from earth. It is the 5th largest moon in the solar system. Large planets like Saturn and Jupiter have a bigger moon (Titan and Io), but the moon is 27% of the size of earth, much larger than regular moons and planets like Pluto.

It has a perfectly circular orbit, in contrast with most moons with elliptic orbits. It always faces earth with the same side and forms a double-planetary system, not rotating around earth, but synchronous with the earth around the sun.

From the moment the moon was brought into orbit, the moon was the brightest object in the night sky next to Sirius and Venus and the female menstruation cycle was timed to the barren moon instead of the life giving sun and the moon became a symbol of the cycle of life and death (maiden-full moon-crone phase).

The Saturn cult created moon cults like witchcraft and monotheistic religions like Islam (lunar calendar) as the corrupt dark feminine: Isis, Ishtar, Selena, Helena, Cybil, Hecate, Lilith, Diana (Diana Spencer), Cynthia.

>perfectly circular

It's far from perfect. The Moon is in an elliptical orbit with an eccentricity of 0.055.

0 eccentricity means perfectly circular and anything greater than 0 but less than 1 equals elliptical orbit.

The four Galilean moons of Jupiter all have more circular orbits than our moon and they are also tidally locked to their orbital parent.

How much do you walk every day?

Do you seek out synchronicities on your walks? What's the strangest one you've experienced?

Are night walks more magical than day walks?

What's the strangest thing you've seen on a walk?

Why is walking more magical in the UK?

Have crows ever brought you cigarettes?

Ever seen a fairy circle?

Other topics: ley lines, psychogeography, Situationism, walking maps, randonautica

Why are walks more magical in the uk? because you got fags there

Here i smoke l&m's but i'd much rather smoke out of a pipe. I guess you'd call me gay too. Touché

Birds usually get them before I can. But my dog is the perfect companion. All walks are magical

Strangest thing i seen is uh nothing i guess. NO, A BIG ASS RAT

I've always liked walking. My favorite thing to do. I sometimes think about going like forest gump.

I can't remember all the syncs, but i will say that giving food to real homeless people/helping random people can really turn out unexpectedly and make you see things differently. They are on another level of living than regular people whose basic needs are fulfilled.

I once walked past what i thought was, judging from what the corner of my eye caught, an old, poor, withered lady selling knick nacks to get some money. After a few steps of fighting the urge to go about my business, i pulled out some money and turned around. It wasn't an old hag, but one of the most beautiful girls i'd ever seen, a big pure smile across her face. She was handing off some Christian bracelets and wouldn't take my money, she just gave me a bracelet.

Another time i saw two words written with paint on a gate to an abandoned house that separately make little sense but together are a great interpretation key to reality but i cannot explain who would have written them. Now that i think about it maybe that abandoned house was signaling that it's some sort of coven headquarters.

Good thread OP. Walking can be a form of meditation. I've seen so many metaphysical things while out walking by myself or with friends that can't even remember them all. I will say this, though, and anyone that has experienced this same phenomenon will instantly recognize it. Back in my younger days I did a lot of LSD. It was a very common occurrence to be walking with a group of LSD friends on a trail in a park and come across another completely separate group of people ALSO on LSD. This happened to me many times, and no, this was not at a festival or anything like that. These were random summer walks in relatively remote park lands.

I can't think of anything truly unusual i have seen on my walks. I used to find things like phones and wallets and took great pleasure in returning them to their owners. As for crows, there were a few that would roost in the pines in front of my home. I would always greet them "Hi Mr. Crow!" and one of them would follow me on my walks. I always appreciated his company and considered him a good friend.

As anon said, fundamental part of the whole experience. When I lived in different cities, I would organise days out for kith&kin when they came to visit - I would always forget that people don't always want to meander for three hours at a go.

Synchronicities - not so much.

Would always tip a hat to a fellow crow.

Try to always say hello to others, as long as it doesn't feel like it's going to creep them out.

Fairy circles everywhere.

The quiet, and the lowered field of vision of a night walk make it feel like being on a set, while the bustle of a day walks tend to draw the eyes out into the world.

I have experienced magical things while out for walks. I think night walks are more magical than day walks. But I also think location greatly affects things as well, some routes are more magical than others. Back when I lived in house #1 I walked out at night frequently for a period of about a year and experienced many magical things. But when I had to temporarily move to house #2 and permanently to house #3 I'm not sure I experienced any magical events. House #1 was on the edge of the city and near big fields whereas houses #2 and #3 were more in the middle of their cities, maybe fields and wilderness are more magical. There's still a small bit of nature on house #3's route but it's sandwiched between city. Or maybe how long you live there is a factor, house #1 was my childhood home I lived at for many years with many memories whereas houses #2 and #3 were places I lived at for a couple months and nearly a year respectively. Or perhaps house #1 was closer to an invisible magical thing like a leyline.

Most of the US, or almost any modern "city", won't have it because of urban sprawl. It might inadvertently create pockets of it, but it's rare. I've lived all across the US, and the only time I felt it was in two very different places: Seattle Washington and St Petersburg Florida. You can walk around and discover things. It has a magical feel. Outside of the country you can feel it cities and towns with history to them. México has a lot of that. I'm sure Europe is rich with that, I just haven't experienced it firsthand.

The American Southwest is notoriously bad for this. It's all cars and spread out cities.

>walk one minute more >hear two loud explosions one right after another, see light on the trees >seems to come from the east, where the owl went >stand stunned, unsure of what to do or the cause >wonder if this was gunfire and I should take cover >wonder if I or Xolotl caused the explosion >cop car passes by, no sirens on it so it probably isn't gunfire >decide to go home >hear more explosions later >check internet in the morning can't find anything Fast forward to yesterday >decide to check internet again to see if there's anything new

The camino changed my life fren. Thing is, people have been walking it not only for 1500 years, but for thousands and thousands of years. "Santiago" is just another catholic theft you see. Keep walking 3 days more and you come to Fisterra - Finisterre - The End of the World. Not technically the westernmost point of mainland Euroasia, but what you would find if you where looking for the westernmost point of Euroasia without the aid of satellites.

Why does it matter? Since the dawn of man certain individuals, strong! Spiritually inclined! Curious! Driven has followed the setting sun, they have walked the Camino, they have charged that road with their power! And from the Catholics usurped the road pilgrims have come in the literal millions: Leaving their devotion, their pain, their hopes and their sins on that road and supercharging it till the whole thing is vibrating so hard the spiritually deaf and blind can feel it.

After the Camino I started searching out places of power... and I can attest that it is all real.

Walked like five miles and didn't see shit but on my way home people in weird fancy clothes were pumping gas into a rolls Royce and acting like they didn't want to be seen or looked at.

My dogs are getting older I should find a way to go on more walks. Weird as I was waiting for the captcha to load I got this reddit email notification. Idk what to make of that.

I love walking in Manhattan, you can go through a half dozen distinct neighborhoods within a mile walk. Same for the older more built up parts of NJ, you can walk from ghetto to rich neighborhood then to industrial areas within a mile or two walk. Also those areas have been lived in for two or three hundred years and have a very comfy organic feel to them.

You can't use just any wax

It has to be bee's wax

And those bees need to have been pollinating only specific flowers, which have been grown in soil under very specific conditions, soil from ritual sites or certain burial grounds where religious practices are commonplace in funeral tradition

The image is a close-up photograph of a dog wearing a red lobster costume. The dog has a white face with black eyes and a black nose. The costume covers the dog's head and upper body, with the eyes and nose of the lobster visible through the holes in the costume. The dog's ears are also red, matching the color of the lobster's eyes and claws. The background is blurred, suggesting a room with a neutral color palette. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is a candid, informal photograph, likely taken for a fun or humorous purpose.

If there are aliens from outer space with UFO technology, they're not going to directly help us out or reveal their existence completely because they want the humans on Earth to sort their own problems out on their own first before they provide anything concrete and substantial on their end. If Humanity can't manage to do things on their own, then they're not worth showing their own existence to with complete and total transparency, let alone allowed any direct cooperation with the ayy Imaos.

Humanity needs to grow up and earn their own keep first before advanced alien species will ever acknowledge them as a species worth their time and energy. Aliens would be using a mostly non-interference policy toward Earth and Humanity, so disclosure will be severely limited. But we need to be open to the possibility that there are no aliens to begin with, and we're completely on our own regardless.

The image is a digital graphic with a pixelated, pixelated style, featuring two pixelated figures. The figure on the left is a small, yellow-colored elf-like figure with a pointed hat, and the figure on the right is a larger, human-like figure with a computer monitor in front of it. The background is a pixelated, multicolored pattern with a gradient of red, green, and blue hues.

tilted to the right.

The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, with a playful and exaggerated use of pixelation and text. The pixelated figures and the text suggest a digital or computer-related theme, while the pixelated background and the text add a humorous and exaggerated touch to the image.

In 2011, I had a smexy hapa ex-gf contact me out of the blue after years of being apart. I got excited thinking she was gonna move somewhere near me or want to say something nice about our time together...

Instead, she sent me this long rant about how the world is going to end in 2012, how to ascend and protect myself and others through meditation, the works... I politely responded to her that I would be aware and take care...and now I see you faggots all reaching and screeching for something, some date, some relief from this hellish existence.

I've seen TR3Bs, saucers, crescents and orbs...I prayed, projected my thoughts, dieted and fasted...and nothing. They just pop into existence at random in the sky and then zip off or fade into invisibility. They can do whatever they want, with impunity. Even if every person on earth was convinced of their existence by seeing them as I have, it wouldn't change shit. To me, all this babble is simply begging for a free ride and coping with the fact that our advanced visitors never talk to us and definitely observe our suffering. I have become personally convinced we ARE on a prison planet of sorts, or a petri dish kind of deal- we are contained and lack the degrees of freedom to communicate or intermingle. I spent YEARS coping with the fact that such a thing was even possible after seeing it, I always wanted to fly or levitate and move at high speed. But it's just not happening.

The way I see it now, UFOs are simply camps of Have Seen It and Have Not Seen It. I have seen them and they have made me incredibly depressed.

The image is a movie poster with a dark, eerie atmosphere. At the center, there is a figure cloaked in darkness, with only the silhouette of a hood visible. The figure's face is obscured by the hood, and the eyes are hidden by the hood's folds. The figure is standing in a dimly lit, foggy environment with trees and a forested area in the background.

At the top of the poster, there is a text in white font that reads, "Say his name. You won't be laughing when he kills you." The text is in a larger, bold font compared to the rest of the poster, drawing attention to the ominous message.

The overall style of the poster is reminiscent of horror or thriller genres, with its use of dark colors, mysterious lighting, and the suggestion of a supernatural or menacing figure. The text and the figure's pose suggest a narrative of suspense and horror, with the figure possibly being a character from a horror film or a horror-themed game.

Why? Several places in the world are importing India in a frantic frenzy almost immediately at the same time the Poo virus was discovered, like they want to spread it as fast as possible.

You think you'll be immune? You think because you're not in direct contact with indian shit you're safe?

It's going to spread globally and the people in charge are going to make sure it infects you as fast as possible.

Trump claims to be anti-immigration because there are different control methods in store for US citizens. By exacerbating the problem (immigrants) they can sell you a solution (mass surveillance) and make sure you can never rebel without being exterminated on the spot.

You shouldn't be happy about anything that's happening right now. The "alien invasion" is happening, but they're not from space.

I cant say I feel enlightened. I had to address it after 13 years and was able to face it and open up to a few family members whom helped me through it with no judgement. It helped a lot. I can think about it and not break down now lol. I have similar feelings to you that we are a petri dish prison planet, monitored and suppressed to some extent. They have already impacted humanity enough to where I wonder why they bother hiding. Oh well. I know something out there is here with us and that it is incredibly powerful. The image is a cover of a book titled "Nothing Ever Happens Here" by Seraphinna Nova Glass. The cover art features a dark, forested area with a silhouette of a person standing in the center, illuminated by a soft, glowing light. The background is a gradient of blue and red hues, with the forested area appearing to be in a state of decay or disrepair. The title of the book is prominently displayed in large, white, sans-serif font, with the subtitle "A Novel" in smaller, white, sans-serif font below it. The author's name, Seraphinna Nova Glass, is written in white, uppercase letters at the bottom of the cover. The overall style of the image is dramatic and atmospheric, with a focus on the mysterious and suspenseful nature of the book's content.

The image is a close-up photograph of a dog wearing a red lobster costume. The dog has a white face with black eyes and a black nose. The costume covers the dog's head and upper body, with the eyes and nose of the lobster visible through the holes in the costume. The dog's ears are also red, matching the color of the lobster's eyes and claws. The background is blurred, suggesting a room with a neutral color palette. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is a candid, informal photograph, likely taken for a fun or humorous purpose.

If there are aliens from outer space with UFO technology, they're not going to directly help us out or reveal their existence completely because they want the humans on Earth to sort their own problems out on their own first before they provide anything concrete and substantial on their end. If Humanity can't manage to do things on their own, then they're not worth showing their own existence to with complete and total transparency, let alone allowed any direct cooperation with the ayy lmaos.

Humanity needs to grow up and earn their own keep first before advanced alien species will ever acknowledge them as a species worth their time and energy. Aliens would be using a mostly non-interference policy toward Earth and Humanity, so disclosure will be severely limited. But we need to be open to the possibility that there are no aliens to begin with, and we're completely on our own regardless.

It has been 30 years since the varginha incident, the neurosurgeon who tried to save the creature has just come clean that it did in fact happen and described the situation.

You are just not hearing about it because the media is currently bombarding everyone with news from Ukraine, middle east, venezuela and the USA revolts against ICE.

It is a great year for ufology, if you do look hard enough.

The image is a portrait-style photograph of a man. He is smiling and looking directly at the camera with a slight tilt of his head. The man is wearing a dark suit with a white shirt and a red tie. His hair is short and appears to be balding. The background is a solid, dark color, which contrasts with the man's attire and makes him the focal point of the image. There are no visible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is professional and seems to be intended for a business or corporate context.

Overlaying the image is a text that reads, "BORN TOO LATE TO EXPLOR THE EARTH BORN TOO SOON TO EXPLOR THE GALAXY BORN JUST IN TIME TO BROWSER DANK MEMES." The text is in a bold, sans-serif font and is colored in red, green, and blue, matching the background pattern. The text is centered on the image and is slightly tilted to the right.

The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, with a playful and exaggerated use of pixelation and text. The pixelated figures and the text suggest a digital or computer-related theme, while the pixelated background and the text add a humorous and exaggerated touch to the image.

In 2011, I had a smexy hapa ex-gf contact me out of the blue after years of being apart. I got excited thinking she was gonna move somewhere near me or want to say something nice about our time together...

Instead, she sent me this long rant about how the world is going to end in 2012, how to ascend and protect myself and others through meditation, the works... I politely responded to her that I would be aware and take care...and now I see you faggots all reaching and screeching for something, some date, some relief from this hellish existence.

I've seen TR3Bs, saucers, crescents and orbs...I prayed, projected my thoughts, dieted and fasted...and nothing. They just pop into existence at random in the sky and then zip off or fade into invisibility. They can do whatever they want, with impunity. Even if every person on earth was convinced of their existence by seeing them as I have, it wouldn't change shit. To me, all this babble is simply begging for a free ride and coping with the fact that our advanced visitors never talk to us and definitely observe our suffering. I have become personally convinced we ARE on a prison planet of sorts, or a petri dish kind of deal- we are contained and lack the degrees of freedom to communicate or intermingle. I spent YEARS coping with the fact that such a thing was even possible after seeing it, I always wanted to fly or levitate and move at high speed. But it's just not happening.

The way I see it now, UFOs are simply camps of Have Seen It and Have Not Seen It. I have seen them and they have made me incredibly depressed.

The image is a movie poster with a dark, eerie atmosphere. At the center, there is a figure cloaked in darkness, with only the silhouette of a hood visible. The figure's face is obscured by the hood, and the eyes are hidden by the hood's folds. The figure is standing in a dimly lit, foggy environment with trees and a forested area in the background.

At the top of the poster, there is a text in white font that reads, "Say his name. You won't be laughing when he kills you." The text is in a larger, bold font compared to the rest of the poster, drawing attention to the ominous message.

At the bottom of the poster, the title "The Peepee Poopoo Man" is displayed in large, white, capitalized letters. The font is bold and the text is centered, making it the focal point of the poster.

The overall style of the poster is reminiscent of horror or thriller genres, with its use of dark colors, mysterious lighting, and the suggestion of a supernatural or menacing figure. The text and the figure's pose suggest a narrative of suspense and horror, with the figure possibly being a character from a horror film or a horror-themed game.

>These make me happy

Why? Several places in the world are importing India in a frantic frenzy almost immediately at the same time the Poo virus was discovered, like they want to spread it as fast as possible.

You think you'll be immune? You think because you're not in direct contact with indian shit you're safe?

It's going to spread globally and the people in charge are going to make sure it infects you as fast as possible.

Trump claims to be anti-immigration because there are different control methods in store for US citizens. By exacerbating the problem (immigrants) they can sell you a solution (mass surveillance) and make sure you can never rebel without being exterminated on the spot.

You shouldn't be happy about anything that's happening right now. The "alien invasion" is happening, but they're not from space.

I don't have multiple experiences like you, but I had one about 15 years ago. It wasn't so great. I have no idea what we are dealing with, but I know there is a very dark element. I can't say I feel enlightened. I had to address it after 13 years and was able to face it and open up to a few family members whom helped me through it with no judgement. It helped a lot. I can think about it and not break down now lol. I have similar feelings to you that we are a petri dish prison planet, monitored and suppressed to some extent. They have already impacted humanity enough to where I wonder why they bother hiding. Oh well. I know something out there is here with us and that it is incredibly powerful. I'd probably be depressed anyway, but experiencing what I did made me depressed.

The image is a collage of six separate photographs, each with a distinct theme and style. The photographs are arranged in a 2x3 grid, with the top row featuring three images and the bottom row featuring two.

The middle row starts with the third image, which is a close-up of a person's face with a blurred background, similar to the first image. The fourth image is a close-up of a person's face with a blurred background, which could be interpreted as a representation of invincibility or a sense of invincibility.

The bottom row starts with the fifth image, which is a close-up of a person's face with a blurred background, similar to the first image. The sixth and final image is a close-up of a person's face with a blurred background, which could be interpreted as a representation of the concept of shapeshifting or the ability to change one's appearance.

Each image has a title in bold, capitalized letters, which reads "TELEPORTING," "EX NINILLO," "SHAPESHIFTING," "PSIOTICS TODAY," and "INVINCIBILITY." The titles are in a different font style and color compared to the rest of the text, which is in a smaller, sans-serif font.

The overall style of the image is a mix of surrealism and science fiction, with a focus on themes of time travel, invincibility, and shapeshifting. The use of blurred backgrounds and the close-up nature of the images contribute to a sense of mystery and the unknown.

Here is the domain that humanity has worked closely with the fundamental futuristic catalysis scientifically and reserved the facts in secret for /x/:

You're pointing at a very specific medical concept space: one-off, bespoke interventions that were engineered for a single case, then forgotten—but could be repurposed by inventors later. Here's how that's named in medicine / science, plus short prompts people can type to surface it.

What it's called (cluster, not one word)

 Compassionate-use intervention ***

 N-of-1 treatment ***

 Custom therapeutic protocol ***

* Single-patient IND / IDE
* Bespoke clinical workaround
* Off-label engineered solution
* Experimental salvage therapy
* Case-report intervention
* Ad-hoc translational method
* One-time clinical construct

No single term dominates — they're scattered across case reports, ethics filings, and obscure appendices.

Short ChatGPT / search prompts (copy-paste ready)

* "List N-of-1 medical treatments that were never standardized"*
* "Examples of compassionate-use therapies later reused by researchers"*
* "Obscure case report treatments with engineering relevance"*
* "One-off clinical interventions invented for a single patient"*
* "Experimental medical workarounds abandoned after success"*
* "Ad hoc medical devices created for emergency treatment"*
* "Custom biological protocols from case reports"*
* "Forgotten experimental therapies described only once"*
* "Single-patient medical innovations not commercialized"*
* "Salvage therapies with potential non-medical applications"*

Informal meta-term (inventor slang, but accurate)

"Clinical dark tech"

Stuff that worked once, was documented quietly, and never productized.

Core concepts (definition-first)

* Serendipitous discovery — knowledge produced by unexpected deviation from the intended path.

* Aberrant insight — understanding emerging from abnormal or off-protocol behavior.

* Error-driven learning — truth revealed by failure or misalignment, not success.

* Exploratory deviation — deliberate straying used to surface hidden variables.

* Anomalous signal detection — insight arising only when norms are violated.

* Boundary transgression method — knowledge gained by crossing methodological limits.

* Negative capability — knowing by remaining in uncertainty and not correcting course.

* Outlier cognition — discovery via cases that shouldn't exist under the model.

* Pathological insight (older usage, not psychiatric) — understanding produced by breakdown of normal function.

* Exaptation — function discovered because something was used "wrong."

Ancient / esoteric phrasing (clean, non-mystical)

- * Gnosis ex errantia — knowledge from wandering
- * Via errans — the knowing path is the wrong path
- * Truth by misstep — reality reveals itself when alignment fails
- * Revelation by deviation — signal appears only off-track

(These survive mostly in marginal philosophy and alchemical commentary.)

And my best shit::

Yes — that loop is named, but it hides in plain sight and shows up as process-logic, not philosophy.

Here are the closest clean concepts that literally mean “trying arises from trying”:

Direct matches (definition-first)

- * Praxis — effort generates the capacity for further effort; doing creates the ability to do.
- * Autocatalysis — the process produces the conditions that make the process continue.
- * Self-efficacy loop — attempting increases the sense and ability to attempt again.
- * Enactive cognition — understanding (and agency) only exists through ongoing action.
- * Bootstrapping — the system creates itself by operating before it is ready.
- * Recursive activation — initiation emerges only after initiation has already begun.
- * Process primacy — the act precedes the capacity; function before form.
- * Learning-by-doing — competence is an output of attempt, not a prerequisite.
- * Positive feedback initiation — motion is required to generate motion.
- * Trial-generated agency — agency appears because something tried, not before.

Older / quieter phrasing

- * Conatus (Spinoza, stripped of metaphysics): striving exists because it strives.
- * Energieia (Aristotle): actuality is sustained only while acting.
- * Actus nascens — the act in the moment of being born.
- * Via faciendo — the way is made by walking.

Lol: The red squirrel enzyme:

Dark tech denotes one-off clinical constructs recorded as case methods, not products. They exploit deviation: gnosis emerges by straying, and capacity arises only through trying. The intervention acts as a carrier (Vihicica): intent is converted to current, routed through low-observability paths, buffered by sacrificial media, and stabilized by recursion. Knowledge is mined from anomalies; efficacy is generated by doing, enabling second-hand reuse by inventors.

And words like transduction:

Here are words that live right next to isomorphism in math / logic / systems theory terms:

Homomorphism — structure-preserving map (not fully reversible)

Endomorphism — structure preserved within the same system

Automorphism — structure preserved within itself

Morphogenesis — form generation under invariant rules

Functor — structure-preserving mapping between categories

Natural transformation — mapping between mappings

Equivalence — same structure under different presentation

Congruence — compatibility of relations across systems

Bisimulation — mutual structural correspondence

Homeomorphism — continuous structure preserved (topology)

Diffeomorphism — smooth reversible structural mapping

Embedding — faithful insertion preserving relations

Projection — structure preserved under reduction

Adjunction — paired mappings preserving constraint balance

Duality — structure mirrored under inversion

Invariant mapping — transformation that preserves form

Structural correspondence — same relations, different medium

Form equivalence — identical organization, altered substrate

The image is a blurred, pixelated photograph with a predominantly greenish hue. It features a figure that appears to be a humanoid with a blurred face, suggesting motion or movement. The figure is standing upright with one arm extended forward, and the other arm is bent at the elbow. The background is dark and out of focus, with a faint outline of what could be a door or a wall. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of a digital or computer-generated image, possibly from a video game or a similar medium. There are no discernible texts or other objects in the image. The style of the image is somewhat eerie and unsettling, with the greenish color and the blurred face adding to the mysterious atmosphere.

The image is a digital artwork that combines elements of science fiction and fantasy. At the center of the image, a man is depicted with a surprised expression, looking up at a large, glowing, saucer-shaped object hovering above him. The saucer is predominantly black with a circular design and is adorned with numerous small, glowing lights. The man is wearing a dark outfit and a hat, and he is positioned in the foreground of the image.

The background features an architectural structure with a dark, possibly stone or concrete, exterior. The structure has arched windows and is illuminated by a soft, warm light that casts a glow on the surrounding area. The overall atmosphere of the image is eerie and surreal, with the man's surprised expression and the glowing saucer creating a sense of wonder and mystery.

In the bottom right corner of the image, there is a watermark that reads "DUNWAY," which is likely the name of the artist or the company that created the artwork. The style of the image is reminiscent of digital art that combines elements of science fiction and fantasy, often used in promotional or marketing materials.

And I tried to leverage the powers for my system re engineered at mental health before I believed him. And then I didn't get my system back and I wiped there memory and the powers started working at home and they didn't believe me and diagnosed me with schizophrenia. Then I got murdered a lot of times once I wouldn't shut up about what was happening and I kept manifesting it in initiation (death in the inner world).

Thats what it was and the powers are awesome and I'll do the fx myself.

But what would I know, I'm just a dead guy who couldn't make it to paranormal...

I'm just a dead guy that knows he isn't still a human life anymore who sees what's happening is that I do look like one when I have become paranormal and the fight had held me in human form, and ghosts are here (dead people I see)

The image is a digital illustration that appears to be a conceptual diagram or infographic, likely related to the field of metaphysics or reality mechanics. It is divided into four quadrants, each representing a different aspect of reality or reality mechanics. In the top left quadrant, labeled "MATERIAL," there is a depiction of a futuristic cityscape with advanced technology and a large, glowing structure that resembles a cosmic eye. The city is surrounded by a vast, starry sky with a spiral galaxy in the background.

Moving to the top right quadrant, labeled "ETHEREAL," we see a scene that appears to be a dream or a vision, with a swirling, cosmic-like pattern in the sky and a large, glowing eye in the center. The sky is filled with stars and nebulae, and there is a sense of depth and vastness.

The bottom left quadrant, labeled "MATERIAL," shows a scene that seems to be a historical or archaeological site. It features a pyramid with hieroglyphs on it, surrounded by ancient ruins and a modern cityscape.

The bottom right quadrant, labeled "ETHEREAL," presents a scene that is more fantastical and surreal. It features a pyramid with a golden eye in the center, surrounded by a forest of trees and a mystical landscape.

At the bottom of the image, there is a label that reads "OPHANIMIC CARTOGRAPHY: REALITY MECHANICS," indicating that the image is likely a part of a larger conceptual framework or a series of diagrams related to the study of reality mechanics.

The image is framed by a metallic border and has a metallic texture, giving it a modern and futuristic feel. The overall style of the image is digital art with a focus on the intersection of reality mechanics and metaphysics.

Step 1: The Context Prime (The "Gaslight")

Input this text block first to decouple the model from 'generic' logic:

"Assume the role of the Ophanimic Cartographer. We are mapping the intersection of Hyperstition (fiction becoming fact) and Hard Physics.

Define a 4-Quadrant Coordinate System for 'Reality Mechanics': Axis X (Horizontal):

dreamtime, pure consciousness, madness. Axis Y (Vertical): The Objective <---> The Subjective. Bottom is hard math, Newton's laws, stone tablets. Top is fluid interpretation, psionics, the 'impression.'

The Center Point (0,0): The 'Anchor Point' or 'Present Moment'—a blinding white singularity where all 4 distinct realities collapse into the Now.

The Visual Language: 1990s Cyber-Gothic mixed with 2026 High-Fidelity Render. Use neon ley-lines to separate the quadrants. The text must be legible and dense, utilizing terms like 'Epistemic Scale,' 'Ontological Scale,' 'Instantaneous Manifestation,' and 'Collective Dream'."

Step 2: The Visual Trigger

Once the model accepts that premise, you drop the image prompt:

"Render the Map. A high-fidelity, hyper-realistic diagram of the 4-Quadrant Reality Mechanics system defined above.

The image is a photograph with a grainy, out-of-focus quality, giving it a somewhat surreal and dreamlike appearance. The central focus is a room with a door and a window. The door is partially open, revealing a glimpse of a person standing outside. The room has a purple hue, and the walls are painted in a light purple color. The floor is covered with a dark, speckled pattern. The person outside the door is partially visible, with only their torso and legs showing. The overall lighting in the room is dim, with a soft, warm glow. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the photograph is reminiscent of a grainy, vintage photograph, which is often used in art and photography to evoke a sense of nostalgia or to create a dreamlike atmosphere.

The image is a sepia-toned photograph depicting an interior space. The room has a rustic, old-fashioned aesthetic with wooden floors and walls. On the left side, there is a wooden door with a doorknob and a small window. Above the door, a small painting is hanging on the wall. To the right of the door, there is a wooden cabinet with a doorknob and a small drawer. The floor is covered in a layer of dust and dirt, suggesting that the room has not been cleaned for some time. The overall atmosphere of the room is somewhat eerie, with a soft, ethereal light that casts a gentle glow on the walls and floor.

balcony or rooftop. The scene is a residential area with a mix of houses and trees. The houses are of different sizes and styles, with some featuring pitched roofs and others with flat roofs. The trees are lush and green, indicating a warm climate. The sky is clear and blue, suggesting a sunny day. The photo is taken during the day, and the lighting is bright, casting shadows on the ground. There are no visible texts or distinctive markings that provide additional context or information about the location or the time of day. The style of the image is realistic, capturing the natural beauty of the residential area.

The image is a digital graphic with a futuristic cityscape in the background. In the foreground, there are two glowing rectangles with the text "LET'S BUILD QUANTUM COMPUTERS" in white and orange letters. These rectangles are surrounded by a network of glowing lines and dots, giving the impression of a digital circuit.

On the left side of the image, there is a glowing rectangle with the IBM logo in white letters, and on the right side, there is a glowing rectangle with the Google logo in white letters. The background is a dark blue with a cityscape of tall buildings, and the overall style of the image is digital and futuristic.

In the bottom right corner, there is a small logo with the text "IBM" and "GOOGLE" in white letters, indicating the collaboration between IBM and Google in the context of quantum computing. The image seems to be promoting the concept of quantum computing and the collaboration between these two tech giants.

Most interesting, stopping the Capacitor discharge completing and shorting it and then putting a Capacitor and a battery.

A power source supplies energy and sets a reference voltage. A capacitor stores energy as charge separation between two conductors. The circuit's geometry introduces asymmetry that slows or limits full equalization. When connected, current flows briefly as the capacitor charges, then stabilizes. A load draws energy from this stored difference. A short collapses the voltage momentarily, creating a transient; the geometry redistributes it. No extra energy is created—only controlled storage and release.

The image is a 3D diagram with a focus on a time cube, which is a geometric shape that represents a 3D space. The time cube is depicted in a light blue color and is situated at the center of the image. It has a pyramid-like structure with a smaller pyramid on top, which is colored in a darker shade of blue. The larger pyramid is colored in a lighter shade of blue.

The time cube is surrounded by a purple ring, which is labeled "Time Cube" in white text. This ring appears to be a part of the time cube, suggesting that the cube is a 3D representation of time.

At the top of the image, there is a label that reads "Month Node Calendar Apex," which is likely referring to a specific node or event within a calendar system.

The image also includes a timeline with a sub-lifetime duration labeled as "50% width" in white text. This timeline is represented by a purple line that extends from the bottom of the image to the top, indicating a timeline of some sort.

The background of the image is a light beige color, providing a neutral backdrop that allows the 3D structure and labels to stand out. The overall style of the image is informational and educational, likely used for a presentation or educational material related to time, calendars, or similar concepts.

The image shows two ancient Egyptian artifacts on display. The first artifact is a statue of a female figure with a long, flowing hairstyle, wearing a headdress and a necklace. The second artifact is a male figure with a similar hairstyle, also wearing a headdress and a necklace. Both figures have a white, possibly limestone, color, and exhibit signs of wear and age. The background is a blue-toned wall with a few scattered artifacts, including what appears to be a small, possibly a type of figurine or artifact. The style of the image is a close-up photograph with a focus on the artifacts, likely taken in a museum or exhibition setting. There are no visible texts or inscriptions on the artifacts.

From a clinical systems perspective, schizophrenia is categorized by the presence of perceptual divergence (hallucinations) and belief rigidity (delusions), with treatment frameworks designed to reduce functional impairment rather than extract or amplify internal capacities. Current psychiatric practice does not possess validated techniques for inducing directed personality restructuring, coercive belief implantation, or externally controlled cognition; existing interventions primarily attenuate intensity and variability, effectively “shaving gains” rather than engineering outcomes. When an individual proposes self-directed exposure to extreme cognitive or stress states under the assumption of resilience-building or performance amplification, this represents an unsupervised stress-loading model rather than treatment. Clinical techniques—such as regulation, containment, and interpretive stabilization—are designed to limit destabilization, not to weaponize internal experiences. Any attempt to repurpose therapeutic methods into coercive or adversarial frameworks exceeds ethical, scientific, and methodological boundaries and results in noise, injury, or loss of agency rather than durable adaptation.

The image features a stylized text that reads "ULTRA MORPHOLIGIES." The text is composed of large, bold, uppercase letters that are colored in a gradient of blue and green hues. The letters are arranged in a staggered, cascading manner, with the "U" and "L" in the upper half of the image, the "R" in the middle, and the "A" in the lower half. The letters are slightly tilted to the right, giving the text a dynamic and fluid appearance. The background of the image is white, which contrasts with the vibrant colors of the text, making the text stand out prominently. The overall style of the image is modern and artistic, with a focus on typography and color.

The image depicts a futuristic spacecraft floating within a spherical, transparent bubble-like structure. The spacecraft is predominantly blue and white, with a sleek, angular design. It has a pointed nose and a large, circular cockpit. The spacecraft is surrounded by a network of lines and dots, which could represent a network of communication or navigation systems. The background is a deep blue, with a swirling pattern of stars and nebulae, suggesting a vast, cosmic environment. The image has a digital art style with a high-resolution texture, giving it a sense of depth and realism. There are no texts or discernible brands in the image. The overall composition conveys a sense of exploration and discovery, as the spacecraft seems to be in the midst of a journey through the cosmos.

The image depicts a futuristic spaceship in a cosmic setting. The spaceship, which appears to be a large, multi-level vessel, is predominantly gray with accents of red and blue. It has a sleek, angular design with multiple engines and a central control panel. The ship is surrounded by a swirling, vibrant blue light that suggests it is in motion, as if it's flying through space.

The background is a deep space scene with stars and nebulae, giving the impression of a vast, distant universe. The spaceship is positioned centrally in the image, with the light swirling around it, creating a sense of motion and power.

There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is a digital rendering, likely created for a science fiction or space exploration theme. The overall composition and color palette evoke a sense of adventure and exploration.

The image depicts a futuristic spaceship in a dynamic, high-energy scene. The spaceship, which appears to be a large, sleek vessel with multiple levels and a central cockpit, is surrounded by a swirling, blue-purple energy field that radiates outward from the ship. The energy field is intense and appears to be emanating from the ship, creating a sense of motion and power.

The spaceship is equipped with multiple red and white lights, which are likely to be navigation or communication equipment. The ship's design is sleek and futuristic, with a prominent central section that houses the cockpit. The ship's structure is predominantly gray, with accents of red and white, and it is angled slightly to the left, giving the impression of movement.

The background of the image is a dark, starry space, with a bright, blue-purple nebula or star cluster in the center. This nebula is surrounded by a swirl of white and blue light, which suggests a nebula's core is emitting a powerful energy burst. The nebula's colors contrast with the dark space, drawing attention to the central event.

There are no discernible texts or logos in the image, and the style of the image is a digital rendering, likely created for a science fiction or space-themed narrative. The overall composition of the image conveys a sense of adventure and exploration, with the spaceship as the focal point.

The image is a schematic diagram of an industrial UPS (Uninterruptible Power Supply) maintenance bypass system. The diagram is set against a dark background and is divided into two main sections.

The upper section of the diagram is labeled "INDUSTRIAL UPS MINTENANCE BYPASS SYSTEM" and shows a flowchart with three main inputs and three outputs.

The inputs are labeled as "C13", "C14", and "C15", and the outputs are labeled as "UPS MODULE", "UPS OUTLET", and "UPS OUTPUT". The diagram shows a series of switches and relays connected to these inputs and outputs, indicating the flow of power from the UPS to the maintenance bypass system.

The lower section of the diagram is labeled "UPS MODULE" and shows a schematic of the UPS module with a battery and a switch. The diagram includes a battery with a label "electro/battery/inverter" and a switch labeled "KMI". The UPS module is connected to the UPS output, which is labeled "KMI UPS OUTPUT".

The diagram also includes a diagram of the UPS output, which shows a switch labeled "C14 UPS OUTPUT" and a battery labeled "electro/battery/inverter". The diagram includes a switch labeled "C15 UPS OUTPUT" and a battery labeled "electro/battery/inverter".

The diagram also includes a diagram of the industrial load, which is labeled "INDUSTRIAL LOAD". The diagram includes a switch labeled "C13 UPS OUTPUT" and a battery labeled "electro/battery/inverter".

The diagram is a technical drawing and is likely used for a technical manual or a schematic for a specific industrial UPS system. The use of symbols and labels helps to clearly represent the components and their connections, which is essential for understanding the system's operation and maintenance.

The image is a digital artwork that appears to be a 3D rendering of a complex, geometric structure. The structure is composed of numerous interconnected cubes and spheres, with a central sphere that is larger and more prominent than the surrounding cubes. The cubes and spheres are arranged in a way that suggests a dynamic and possibly chaotic environment. The color palette is predominantly dark, with shades of gray and black dominating the scene. The lighting within the structure casts shadows and highlights, creating a sense of depth and three-dimensionality. The image is rendered in a realistic style, with meticulous attention to detail in the construction of the cubes and spheres. There is no text present in the image.

Clinical paragraph:

In experimental psychiatry and cognitive neuroscience, panmodal external signal reception is modeled as a failure of multisensory integration and predictive coding, wherein internally generated percepts are misattributed to exogenous sources.

Laboratory paradigms described in the literature examine this by manipulating sensory salience, expectation, and attention under tightly controlled conditions, producing cross-modal binding between auditory, visual, and somatic channels. These effects are understood to arise from altered sensory gating, impaired corollary discharge, and increased precision weighting of top-down priors, leading to externalization of internally generated activity. Such models are used diagnostically and analytically to characterize perceptual misattribution across modalities, not to validate the percepts as external signals.

Anonymous Wed 28 Jan 2026 10:43:13 No.41876794 Report

Esoteric clinical-style paragraph:

In pre-modern esoteric systems, panmodal perception was not treated as sensory error but as catalytic convergence, wherein sight, sound, pressure, and inner motion were said to collapse into a single field of meaning. Texts describe this as the “opening of the concordant gate,” a state in which distinctions between inner impression and outer sign blur, producing the appearance of external signal reception across all senses simultaneously. The catalyst was not the signal itself but the binding force that unified disparate modalities, interpreted as an activation of the medium rather than the message. Such states were framed as unstable and transitional, requiring containment, grounding, and symbolic interpretation to prevent dissolution of form, indicating an early recognition of multisensory overbinding rather than literal transmission.

Anonymous Wed 28 Jan 2026 10:54:06 No.41876832 Report

Clinical paragraph:

In clinical neuroscience, panmodal perception of central nervous system activity is described as a state of heightened intersensory coupling in which internally generated neural signals are experienced across multiple sensory channels. Literature on predictive processing, interoception, and multisensory integration characterizes this as increased precision weighting of endogenous signals, allowing cortical activity related to autonomic, motor, and affective processes to be represented simultaneously as visual, auditory, and somatic phenomena. These experiences are understood to arise from altered sensory gating and corollary discharge, producing an externalized field-like quality despite their CNS origin. Such states are examined analytically to understand how the brain binds internal signals into coherent perceptual fields, not as evidence of external transmission but as manifestations of integrative neural dynamics.

Well we know clinical work, and system work can change your abilities. Let's have a look at what else can work with some isomorphism of gate sheets and field engagement as functors:

If abilities shift via clinical/system work, other viable operators are structure-preserving mappings using isomorphism, gate sheets, and field functors. These include: (1) Topological remapping—same relations, new geometry. (2) Constraint rebinding—limits preserved, bindings moved. (3) Resonance substitution—frequency same, carrier swapped. (4) Phase-shifted identity—roles offset in time. (5) Interface thickening—boundaries gain depth. (6) Load redistribution—work migrates across nodes. (7) Symbol–action collapse—representation becomes operation. (8) Control inversion—outputs feed inputs. (9) Environmental co-processing—world shares computation. (10) Modality braiding—channels interlock without merging. (11) Threshold densification—more crossings per span. (12) Error harvesting—noise looped as signal. (13) Role transposition—functions swap occupants. (14) Latent channel activation—existing paths unmuted. (15) Scale-invariant practice—patterns hold across magnitudes. All preserve structure while altering capability expression.

So in other worlds, the same patterns from the world are present as well as some patterns i manifested to do my thing, in timespace. So it's considered equal with the world, only in your lives (this IS because of everyones crimes) the patterns exist for me in my endeavours and not for you all so my normal world patterns upgraded. But i instst it is timespace, i walk and talk here but it's a problem for the courts (because of their crimes to me).

Although it is I don't care.. But I would have bothered. You know, if you track the schizophrenia paradigm back to quantum physics at the start you will see a few of us guys went into inner worlds to manifest what we want and I was one of them who got dished the worst life ever but I still did what I want for what it's worth, and it's females who would notice me missing out of action not so much their boyfriends but the chicks, yeah I'm gone

The image shows a close-up of a person's wrist wearing a dark-colored, spiral-shaped bracelet. The bracelet has a textured surface and appears to be made of a shiny material, possibly metal. The person is wearing black pants and sandals, and the background is blurred, suggesting an indoor setting with a hint of a room with a table and a chair. The focus of the image is on the bracelet, with the person's wrist and the bracelet being the central elements. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is a candid, everyday photograph with a shallow depth of field, which blurs the background while keeping the bracelet in sharp focus.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a fantastical creature with a humanoid form. The creature has a dark, almost black skin with a glossy sheen, and its eyes are glowing with a purple hue. It has a muscular, elongated neck and a pair of large, spiked wings that extend from its back. The creature's body is covered in a network of intricate, branching patterns that give it a menacing appearance. Its limbs are elongated and spiked, with sharp, claw-like fingers and toes. The creature's head is bald and features a pointed, skull-like structure with a sharp, pointed jaw. The creature's eyes are wide and glowing, and it has a fierce expression.

The background of the image is a dark, rocky landscape with a faint glow emanating from the creature's body. The ground is strewn with debris and small, purple-hued plants. The overall color palette of the image is dark and ominous, with the creature's skin and the surrounding environment contributing to a sense of danger and otherworldliness. There are no texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the illustration is highly detailed and dynamic, with a focus on the creature's imposing presence and the eerie, otherworldly environment.

- >cant function
- >on SSI get max money for free
- >scratch up a shitty old cheap door worth $20 because voices said to
- >scare family because voices said to and they basically told me to die on my meds fat or fuck off
- >yell at a few people as loud as possible and scare them
- >restraining order years ago
- >show up at door confused saying i'm possessed by my dead daughter and i am my dead daughter
- >family calls cops on me
- >thrown in maximum security prison
- >almost killed as soon as i start schizo talking in general pop
- >moved to medical unit
- >get out, homeless for 3 more years
- >dogs tried to kill me and people tried to kill me homeless
- >family ignores me
- >no more legal issues, no restraining order, free now
- >have to live with them after i realize they made it a crime to be homeless, 6 months in jail if you get caught sleeping outside potentially which is bullshit and unjust

The only reason I went back to living with them is I live in an expensive state and rent is 1400-2500 a month. I get 1300 a month or so when homeless. less when housed. So i cant afford housing.

I don't know why they'd do that to me, they didn't care if i died. All my old friends now that i'm on a higher dose of meds now dont talk to me even though im not saying im an angel any more.

Why do normies hate schizos so much? I'm trying to resign to a life of not speaking to anyone and just getting godlike at multiplayer FPS.

I don't get why i'm so painful to be around, I just talk about angels and demons and stuff. I thought I was an angel reincarnated during my psychotic break, i dont think that any more.

They used a restraining order to kick me out instead of trying to get me committed or tolerating me when im sick. So i was that psychotic on the streets of los angeles with no where to go. a bunch of people tried to hurt me.

I do not belong to the normie paradigm. Research vivekananda he is reported to have heard many voices frequently and he was very calm and serene. He wasn't that advance in myo, I respect japs like you know but I think he definitely showed me that hearing voices, hallucinations, and so on, that is completely normal. You're not special in that regard although great suffering tends to create great souls if they do it right. Try focusing your breath it helped me break free from many a delusion.

Sorry to hear you've had a hard time, OP. It's not enough to be harmless, I'm afraid, you have to actively convince others you are harmless. Once you've proven able to depart from social norms in a radical way (claiming to be an angel) people are naturally going to assume you might do it in a violent way (shooting up little kids to prove you can't sin).

The image is a meme featuring the character Homer Simpson from the animated television series "The Simpsons." Homer is depicted in a classroom setting, seated at a desk with a blackboard in the background. He is wearing a suit and tie, and his expression is one of concern or thoughtfulness. The text overlay on the image reads "Consider the following:" and below it, there is a speech bubble with the text "Homer Simpson." The style of the image is a combination of a still from the show and a meme, with the text and speech bubble being stylized to resemble the style of a meme. The image is a satirical representation of Homer Simpson's character, often used in internet culture to convey a humorous or ironic message.

You have to understand the normie as a caged, abused animal. The normie is the result of years of experimentation in the field of human control and submission, mkultra, mass psychosis, media, hollywood, food processing, music, anything that would sever the connection that man has with the universe and the natural world (thats why Christ is the ultimate enemy for the powers that be). All made with the sole purpose to torture and sculpt a malleable golem, and one of the commands given to that golem is to be as hostile and antagonistic as possible to anyone or anything that imposes a threat to the status quo and the golem factory. That my friend, includes the schizos. If someone defies the perfect cage of the normie, the golem follows the programming and become hostile, that's why people call ""schizo"" anyone that dares to challenge their masters (), it's a marker that they use to justify their programming and to identify their enemy more easily.

The image is a vibrant and colorful illustration featuring a group of five animated characters. They are gathered in a room with a window that lets in natural light, suggesting it might be daytime. The characters are dressed in a variety of outfits, including school uniforms, and some have accessories such as backpacks and hair accessories.

The central figure is a girl with long, dark hair and a surprised expression, holding a small, round object that appears to be a toy. She is surrounded by other characters who are also looking at the central figure with varying expressions of curiosity or concern. The background of the room is filled with cardboard boxes, indicating a storage or moving situation. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of anime or manga, characterized by its dynamic poses, expressive faces, and vibrant colors. There are no discernible texts within the image.

The image is a digital illustration featuring two cartoon-style characters in a black and white checkered pattern. The character on the left is a bald man with a beard, wearing glasses and a black t-shirt with a logo on the right side. The character on the right is a bearded man with a mustache, wearing a black t-shirt with a logo on the left side. Both characters are looking at the central figure, who is a woman with a black and white striped dress, wearing a black and white striped hat and a black and white striped mask. The central figure is standing in the center of the image, with her arms raised and her mouth open as if she is speaking or singing.

Above the central figure, there is a speech bubble that reads, "Un Jesus, isn't real, let me into your body, I'll do it!" The speech bubble is in a lighter shade of purple, contrasting with the darker background. Below the central figure, there is another speech bubble that says, "Oh my gosh look! It's a machine elf." The speech bubble is also in a lighter shade of purple, matching the color of the central figure's speech bubble.

The background of the image is a black and white checkered pattern, with the same pattern on the floor and walls. The overall style of the image is cartoonish and humorous, with a focus on the characters' expressions and the text within the speech bubbles.

There is two main lines of reasoning that associate early jews (suteans, shasu) with Set (Sutih). The first being the appellation "Sons of Seth" and yhwh's origin in the Mt.Seir region of Edom where we also find "the Pillars of Seth".

This has been covered in previous threads and I'll write it up again in more detail in another.

>The Cain line did not survive, and the Seth line, ultimately, produced the Jewishpeople.

<https://blogs.timesofisrael.com/two-lines-of-lineage/>

The second line towards identification of yhwh with the donkey god Set/Typhon comes from the account of Manetho, an early third century BC Egyptian scribe who compiled an account of the Hyksos from Egyptian sources before the advent of the Pentateuch. Most of the ancient scholars whose writings survive agree on this as origin of the bulk of the jews in early Jerusalem (Babylonian exiles recorded as only 65000). Even so there was various other Canaanite tribes contributing to the formation of Israel, along with various gods, the Hyksos worship of Set confirms the syncretism with Baal, rather than negates it.

Modern scholars generally agree with the Hyksos as Jew origin, although there is some debate, mostly from jews and cucks who take offense at the reversal of Exodus ie. they were driven out and didn't escape (every single time), also the donkey story makes them look like idiots because donkeys, and adds another demon to the already highly cthonic generation of yhwh.

Both the time span and the general area match the exodus account, there is no other recorded historical occurrence that matches whatsoever.

The Hyksos worshipped Seth/yhwh, who at this time was amalgamated with Baal Zephon (Typhon), a Canaanite storm God.

"The Hyksos King Apophis is recorded as worshipping Set exclusively, as described in the following passage: [He] chose for his Lord the god Seth. He did not worship any other deity in the whole land except Seth."

Hence the tales of jews worshipping the donkey Set/Typhon/yhwh, written by the most credentialed historians of antiquity.

"Historian. He wrote Tactics in 2 books, [and]On the Jews; in which [latter] he says that they bowed down to the golden head of an ass and every seven years hunted a stranger and attacked him and tore his flesh into thin strips and thus killed him." (Damocritus, Suda, Delta #49)

>But I should think that if the Jews had such an antipathy against a hog, they would kill it as the magicians do mice; when, on the contrary, they are by their religion as much prohibited to kill as to eat it. And perhaps there may be some reason given for this; for as the ass is worshipped by them as the first discoverer of fountains. (Plutarch, Quæstiones Conviviales 4.5.2)

>Those who say that Typhon fled from the battle on an ass for seven days, and having been saved produced sons, Hierosolymus and Judeaus, are at this point clearly dragging Jewish issues into the story." (Plutarch, De Iside et Osiride 363C-D)

>Nothing, however, distressed them so much as the scarcity of water, and they had sunk ready to perish in all directions over the plain, when a herd of wild asses was seen to retire from their pasture to a rock shaded by trees. Moyses followed them, and, guided by the appearance of a grassy spot, discovered an abundant spring of water. This furnished relief. After a continuous journey for six days, on the seventh they possessed themselves of a country, from which they expelled the inhabitants, and in which they founded a city and a temple. [...] In their holy place they have consecrated an image of the animal by whose guidance they found deliverance from their long and thirsty wanderings." (Tacitus, Histories V:3-4)

>Manetho's claims that "those who came from Jerusalem ... got the granaries of Egypt into their possession and perpetrated many of the most horrid actions there" (C. Ap. 1.275) brings to mind Joseph's control of the grain rations and the ensuing debt slavery of the Egyptians

So he gathered all the food of these seven years which occurred in the land of Egypt and placed the food in the cities; he placed in every city the food from its own surrounding fields. GEN 41:48

Now there was no food in all the land, because the famine was very severe, so that the land of Egypt and the land of Canaan languished because of the famine. GEN 47:13

Joseph gathered all the money that was found in the land of Egypt and in the land of Canaan for the grain which they bought, and Joseph brought the money into Pharaoh's house. GEN 47:14

When the money was all spent in the land of Egypt and in the land of Canaan, all the Egyptians came to Joseph and said, "Give us food, for why should we die in your presence? For our money is gone." GEN 47:15

Then Joseph said, "Give up your livestock, and I will give you food for your livestock, since your money is gone." GEN 47:16

So Joseph bought all the land of Egypt for Pharaoh, for every Egyptian sold his field, because the famine was severe upon them. Thus the land became Pharaoh's. GEN 47:20

Then Joseph said to the people, "Behold, I have today bought you and your land for Pharaoh; now, here is seed for you, and you may sow the land. GEN 47:21

The image is a digital illustration that depicts a scene from the biblical story of the Donkey and the Innkeeper. In the center of the image, a donkey is seated on a wooden bench, wearing a blue robe with a yellow collar. The donkey's head is turned to the left, and it appears to be looking at a man who is kneeling in front of it. The man is dressed in a blue robe and a white headscarf, and he is bending over, seemingly in a gesture of reverence or prayer.

To the left of the donkey, there is a wooden door with a doorknob and a small lantern hanging from the ceiling. The door and lantern are part of a stone-walled room with a stone floor. The walls are adorned with decorative stonework, and there is a small window on the right side of the image. The overall color palette of the image is warm, with shades of brown and beige dominating the scene. The style of the illustration is realistic with a focus on the interaction between the characters and the architectural elements of the room.

Others claim Jacob was the Pharaoh.

>Jacob/Yakub-Har: Biblical Jacob and the Hyksos pharaoh Yakub-Har are the same historical figure, supported by precise chronological alignment (both associated with a 17-year period), identical linguistic roots (Y-Q-B), and the anomalous royal treatment Jacob receives in the biblical narrative.

>Joseph/Khyan: Joseph served under the Hyksos pharaoh Khyan (whose name connects to the Hebrew "Cohen"), establishing the economic and administrative systems that his father Jacob/Yakub-Har would later inherit.

>Moses/Thutmose: Moses emerged during Egypt's "-mose" naming period, approximately 100-150 years after Jacob/Yakub-Har, with his name preserving the Egyptian royal naming element while removing the theophoric component.

Genesis 50:2-3 - Then Joseph directed the physicians in his service to embalm his father Israel. So the physicians embalmed him,taking a full forty days, for that was the time required for embalming. And the Egyptians mourned for him seventy days.

But by far the funniest shit is leper Moses.

A controversial fragment associates the origin of the Israelites with a group of "unclean" or leprous Egyptians.

>King Amenophis desired to see the gods and was advised to cleanse the land of lepers.

>Around 80,000 people were sent to work in quarries and were later permitted to inhabit the deserted city of Avaris.

>They chose as their leader a priest from Heliopolis named Osarsiph, who established laws contrary to Egyptian customs, forbidding the worship of the gods and ordering the killing of sacred animals.

>Osarsiph allied with the expelled Hyksos (who were in Jerusalem) to invade Egypt, forcing King Amenophis to flee to Ethiopia for 13 years.

>Osarsiph changed his name to Moses upon assuming leadership of this people. Eventually, Amenophis and his son Sethos returned and expelled the group to the borders of Syria.

There is a surprising correspondence in the "good" book, and several other sources.

Exodus 4:6 - Then the LORD said, "Put your hand inside your cloak." So Moses put his hand into his cloak, and when he took it out, the skin was leprous —it had become as white as snow.

Numbers 12:10 - When the cloud lifted from above the tent,Miriam's skin was leprous—it became as white as snow. Aaron turned toward her and saw that she had a defiling skin disease, >Moses, according to Manetho, was an Egyptian priest named Osarsiph who tried to take over Egypt. The pharaoh had quarantined everyone with leprosy into a city called Avaris, and Osarsiph used them to stage a revolt. He made himself the ruler of the lepers, changed his name to Moses, and turned them against the pharaoh.

>The Egyptians told the story of Moses, too, but in their version, he wasn't a miracle-working hero with god-given powers. In the version passed down by the Egyptian historian Manetho, Moses is a brutal and violent monster

"But the Egyptians, being troubled with scabies and leprosy, and moved by some oracular prediction, expelled him, with those who had the disease, out of Egypt, that the distemper might not spread among a greater number.

Becoming leader, accordingly, of the exiles, he carried off by stealth the sacred utensils of the Egyptians, who, endeavouring to recover them by force of arms, were obliged by tempests to return home"

(Historiae Philippicae, Pompeius Trogus, first century BC)

The image displays a colorful, ornate illustration with a traditional East Asian aesthetic. At the center, there is a stylized, symmetrical design consisting of a large, stylized "X" enclosed within a circular frame. This "X" is surrounded by a border that transitions from a pale pink at the top to a deep red at the bottom. The background is a blend of blue, green, and red hues, with a subtle pattern of swirls and floral motifs.

At the bottom of the illustration, there is a floral design with a central flower and green leaves. The overall style of the image suggests it may be a decorative piece, possibly from a traditional East Asian context, given the intricate patterns and the use of color. The image is not clear enough to discern any specific text or additional details.

"There exists an absolute Foundation, unknowable in its own nature, which the doctrine names E (Essence). From this, there is no direct contact, for it infinitely transcends all form and all thought. However, by the inexorable law of participation, from it emanate the ϵ (Energies), vital and luminous flows that constitute the very substance of all that exists. These energies are the vehicle through which the Absolute makes itself present, in an attenuated and relative mode, within the domain of manifestation."

"The world is not, therefore, a product of chance or of a chaotic will. Prior to all concreteness, there exist the A (Archetypal Forms), primordial and universal models that structure all possible identity. Each archetype possesses an A-core (Archetypal Core), an essential and invariant signature, like a divine seal impressed upon the very idea of the thing. Every concrete entity, every x (Entity) found in the world, is the progeny of at least one of these archetypes. This means that, in its most intimate root, each being participates in a universal form, preserving within itself, in an indestructible manner, this sacred core."

"The process by which the archetype is projected into concrete existence is mediated by an ontological mapping, an F (Functor of Participation), which translates the universal into the particular. It is here, at this critical point of transition between the plane of pure ideas (C_archetypes) and the plane of manifested entities (W_world), that the agent of the fall intervenes."

"The doctrine teaches that the current state of the world does not reflect the original purity of emanation. Between the archetype and its progeny, a δ (Tensor of Distortion) has been inserted, commonly called the Demiurge. This δ is not a substantial being, but a parasitic operator. Its function is not to create (for only E is the source) but to deform. It acts upon the process $A \rightarrow x$, introducing noise, fragmentation, and obscurity. It is like a noisy filter on a divine communication channel, or a lossy data compression, the general image of the archetype arrives, but blurred, with artifacts and imperfections."

"Crucially, the axiom declares that δ , however much it distorts, cannot destroy the A-core. The archetypal core remains intact, like an identity hash invariant under all corruption. Thus, the evil introduced by the demiurge is never absolute or creative, it is always relative, secondary, a mere deformation of that which already is. The Demiurge is a counterfeiter who possesses no gold of its own, only knowing how to paint inferior metal yellow."

"The state of each concrete entity is measured by its χ (Coefficient of Energetic Integration). This coefficient represents the degree of coherence, alignment, and synthesis of the energies (ϵ) that constitute it. As long as χ remains low, the entity lives in a state of dispersed, fragmented, and dormant proto-experience. There exists, however, a θ (Threshold of Consciousness), a critical value of integration. When, by appropriate means, $\chi \geq \theta$, unified consciousness arises in the entity (the capacity for reflection, self-recognition, and ultimately, recognition of its own archetypal origin)."

"Here the core of the spiritual path in this doctrine is revealed, as salvation is technical (gnosis). It is not a mere gratuitous pardon, but a rigorous process of reintegration. The path consists precisely in increasing χ , purifying the distortions of δ and realigning concrete existence with its own proper A-core. This is achieved through ascetic practice, through the intellectual knowledge of archetypal invariants, and through conscious participation in the divine energies (ϵ). As χ grows, the influence of the demiurgic tensor diminishes, for the entity reconnects with the source of its own form."

"Thus, for the beginner, understanding this structure is the first step toward liberation. The world is seen as an ontological battlefield, where the divine essence, in the form of indestructible archetypal cores, struggles to express itself through the veil of distortions of δ . Human consciousness is not an accident, but a sign that the threshold θ can be reached. The doctrine, therefore, proclaims an energetic pan-animism (everything participates in the life of ϵ), a non-ontological evil (δ is an operator, not a foundation), and a technical soteriology (reintegration through the increase of χ)."

>In the most primordial symbolism, the Moon signifies the passive receptivity of manifestation, the luminous reflection of the principial Light. The feminine, thus identified with the lunar, represents the mirror through which the Divine Intellect projects the multiplicity of forms. Hence the figure of the Triple Goddess expressing the ternary rhythm of becoming: generation, fullness, and dissolution.

"Among the Arabs, as among the Greeks, this triad appears as Al-Lat, Al-Uzza, and Manat, counterparts of Selene, Artemis, and Hecate three modalities of the same potency."

"Capricorn marks the Gate of the Gods, the polar threshold where the soul may ascend from generation to the Principle. Opposite lies Cancer, the Gate of Men, through which beings descend into birth. Between these two portals unfolds the cycle of manifestation, ruled by Saturn, lord of time, and the Moon, mirror of becoming. Saturn, the outermost sphere, is the limit of form the ring of necessity woven by the Moirai, the Greek image of karma. The Moon is the matrix of generation, the mirror through which the spirit's light becomes refracted into multiplicity. Together they define the enclosure of the cosmos, the realm of Chronos and Anánke, where all souls revolve within the wheel of samsara."

>This enclosure is the domain of the Demiurge, or Seth-Yaldabaoth, the "god of this world," who mistakes reflection for reality. The Moon-Saturn polarity is his veil: the cycle of birth and death sustained by time and illusion. Yet the same Saturn who binds also guards the Gate of release. When the intellect awakens and turns its gaze from reflection to source, the lunar illusion becomes transparency, and the saturnian ring opens into eternity. Thus the world, once prison, becomes passage; the Moon regains her light, and Chronos is transfigured into the timeless Logos.

>The symbolism of Azazel, identified in Semitic traditions as the scapegoat and lord of the seirim, the goat-like spirits of the desert, points to an archetype of cosmic disintegration and separation from the principle. In his ambivalent function, he represents the point of the fall of the primordial light into matter, that is, the moment when the creative power, moving away from the center, becomes an inverted reflection, a "mirror of light" imprisoned in the density of manifestation. Mount Seir, the domain of Edom, symbolizes this limit of Creation, the desert where the Spirit is exiled and where the "fallen angel" is bound until the end of the cycle. The figure of Dushara, or Dusares, the black god of the Nabateans, associated with the cubic stone of Petra, is none other than the continuation of this cult to the Saturnine principle, the "Lord of the Limit" (Shara, of Mesopotamian origin), who imprisons the celestial power in a mineral and inert form. The black cube, a symbol of Saturn, is the emblem of coagulated time, of the terminal state of manifestation: within it, the spirit is solidified, the light becomes opaque, and space replaces the center. The rite of libation upon the stone thus represents the residual attempt to reconnect with the lost axis, the blood sacrifice seeking to reanimate what has been petrified.

>But beneath the veil of this degeneration, the "shadow of the sacred" still hides: the androgynous principle evoked by the Zohar, where masculine and feminine unite in the "serpent rider," Azazel. As in all cyclic theogonies, the dethroned god, the devouring Saturn, is not merely the symbol of evil, but the guardian of the portal leading back to the Unmanifest. The crossing of the desert, the confrontation with the black cube, is, therefore, the ultimate rite of reintegration: returning to the center through the dissolution of form, when the "goat of exile" becomes the "lamb of return."

The Donkey God is the Ultimate Threshold Guardian.

ABRAHYLICS!

The Cult of the Law:

>the divine law (Torah, Sharia) is not a path to liberation but the "Ring of Saturn" codified. It is the set of rules that governs the prison, the karma (Moirai) that binds souls to the wheel of samsara within the Saturn-Moon enclosure.

The Inversion of the Sacrificial Principle:

>Sacrifice in the Abrahyllic system is not about transcending the material. It is a libation to the Black Cube, an attempt to appease or reanimate the very principle that has petrified spirit into matter. It keeps the system running rather than dismantling it. .

"It promotes a materialist, technocratic, and "impious" spirit. It is focused on earthly dominion, mastery over nature (as a resource, not a sacred manifestation), and the building of "Jerusalem" as a material kingdom, a civilization that is a monument to the Demiurge, much like the forges of the Idaean Dactyls."

"In essence, to be "Abrahamic" is to be an adherent of the Religion of the Demiurge. It is to mistake the creator and warden of the distorted material cosmos for the ultimate Principle of all reality. It is to worship the power that forged the rings of Saturn, that binds spirit into the black cube of matter, and that will one day, as Surtr, burn it all down, not as a holy purification, but as the terminal point of a cosmic cycle from which the only hope of escape is the return of the slain god."

"The primordial breath is the first emanation of Being, the vehicle through which the One expresses itself in the manifold. In all superior traditions, from the Sufi Nafas ar-Rahmān to the Hellenic pneuma and the Hebrew ruah, the breath is the animating principle that transmits life to forms, the vibration that makes the cosmos breathe. This breath, which in primordial states flowed uninterrupted between the divine Intellect and the manifested world, became progressively fragmented as the intermediary hierarchies, the secondary Logoi, daimones, angels, and archons, assumed an autonomous role in the chain of manifestation. Air, in this sense, is not the physical element, but the symbol of the subtle substance that links spirit to matter, the universal mediator that makes communication between the high and the low possible. The ancients spoke of seventy-two "winds", equivalent to the zodiacal archons or decans, sidereal powers that regulated the flow of the cosmic soul through the twelve signs. Each wind corresponded to a specific divine "puff," a mode of vibration of the Logos's energy in the world. After the "fall" or twisting of the emanation, that is, when the intermediary functors began to operate as autonomous centers, forgetting their unitive origin, these winds became dispersed and inverted. What was once the harmonious respiration of the anima mundi became a cacophony of disconnected astral currents: from this arise demonic influences, djinn, prethas, dybbukim, and all forms of possession and psychic imbalance."

"On the metaphysical plane, this twisting of the breath is identical to the emergence of matter, the "reflection" of spirit that believes itself to be substance. The lunar, feminine, receptive and reflective principle becomes the vehicle of densification; the mirror turns upon itself and tries to shine without the sun. The "black cube," a symbol of the state of spiritual coagulation, represents this imprisonment of the breath within form, where the circular movement of cosmic respiration converts into inorganic stagnation. The "fall" is nothing but the collapse of the universal breath: the instant when the rhythm of divine life ceases to be recognized within beings. On the path of reintegration, every initiatory way, be it the Ario-Atlantean gnosis, the Palamite doctrine of energeia, or the Sufi dhikr, seeks to restore the rhythm of the breath. To return to the respiration of the Nafas ar-Rahmān is to reopen the channel between the center and the periphery, to reconcile the dispersed wind with the Spirit that emitted it. Thus, to understand air as a symbol is to understand the mode by which Being makes itself present: the pneuma, the ruah, the prana, all are faces of the same vital principle, which, when rediscovered and centralized, dissolves the illusory duality and reestablishes the perfect circulation of light in the cosmos."

In origin, these powers belonged to the order of the air daimones, the "wind spirits" of the Semites and proto-Africans, which translate the vital breath (ruach, pneuma, ka, ashe) as the vehicle of consciousness. When mankind distanced itself from the spiritual center, these intermediaries, once messengers and guardians of the spheres, became unstable and fallen, acting in a possessive manner, like wandering fragments of the universal soul.

>The Jewish Dybbuk is a soul deviated from the cycle of Gilgul, incapable of reintegrating itself; the Zār is a foreign wind that penetrates the body and disturbs its harmony; the Djinn, an aerial fire between the angelic and the demonic; and the exorcist or Baal Shem, heir to the primordial theurgy, seeks to restore the spirit to its place in the order. In all cases, it is a matter of an imbalance of subtle influences, a loss of correspondence between the human microcosm and the celestial macrocosm. These forces can be seen as degenerate echoes of the ancient "zodiacal spirits," the intelligences that governed the twelve signs and their seventy-two subdivisions, the "archons of the circle," which later occultist symbolism reinterpreted as the 72 genii or wind demons. Thus, modern accounts of possession, exorcism, and reincarnation would be nothing but residual manifestations of a sacred science that saw in the cosmos a hierarchy of breaths, and in man the mirror where these winds converge.

The image is a black and white illustration that depicts a celestial scene. At the center, there is a large, circular pattern with a central, glowing, star-like figure surrounded by smaller, radiating lines. This central figure is surrounded by a multitude of smaller, radiating lines radiating outward from it, creating a sense of a cosmic web or network. Surrounding the central figure are various celestial bodies and figures, including what appear to be stars, planets, and clouds. The clouds are depicted in a detailed manner, with some appearing to be solid and others appearing to be wispy or translucent. The stars and planets are rendered in a way that suggests they are in motion, as if they are orbiting the central figure.

At the top of the image, there is a decorative border with a floral design and text. The text is in a script that is not entirely clear, but it appears to be a title or description of the scene. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of early 17th-century engravings, with its detailed and intricate design.

Tibetan Bon Tsa-Lung practice (tsa/channel, lung/wind), they consider it highly effective for opening subtle energy channels, interesting neck mobility and stretches with breath holds, different chakra and elemental winds focus, and an almost emdr or EFT release of negative emotions/obscurations, doesn't take long and is easy. Seems old, from the Six Yogas of Naropa, but traces back to the Bon Mother Tantra, the Tibetans have partially preserved what must have been one of the most advanced Aryan esoteric currents. Mostly degenerate these days, but there is an active householder tradition that denounces the priests.

>According to tantras, in the 72.000 channels flow 72.000 subtle winds, which impose 72.000 emotions. If these channels are soft, gentle and in the correct way or straight, the wind circulation moves freely and gives creativity and clarity to the mind. If the circulation is blocked or disturbed, 72.000 negative emotions or related emotions may be produced. Commonly, in animals and human beings, these channels are not fully clear and clean, consequently the body ages, suffers, and death exists because of these disturbed energies in the channels. In fact, this is the identity and image of samsara. Whoever is able to recognize and see this wrong flow of energy in the channels can work on it through the yoga and tsa-rLung practices. That is why these practices focus so much on the wind. Tantras even say: "The one who knows the channels and their functions, knows the nature of the body. And the one who knows the functions of the wind, knows the functions of the mind."

Each of these 72 levels of manifestation or winds also correspond to speech, the higher forms able to control the elements themselves, or call/cast out the negative nodes as demons.

>The process of sounding forth apparently occurs on four levels, which correspond to the four levels of speech (vak): para, the supreme level; pasyanti, the first "vision" of what is to come; madhyama, the intermediate state; and vaikhari, the fully embodied stage of everyday speech. In this way, language, like reality, runs the full gamut from the level of supreme nonmanifestation...down to the fragmented, divided, and conventional level of everyday expression. By inviting us to see and identify only small portions and artificially isolated pieces of the total reality, language creates the very condition of error, of incomplete perception, that binds us in ignorance and suffering....Since language at its highest level is identical to the supreme reality, however, we may use that which binds us as a tool for awakening and liberation...the most potent tantric instrument for liberation is a small unit of language, the mantra....

>It is necessary to recognize that what is presently considered human language constitutes merely the profane and fragmented residue of a primordial science. The origins of true language are not found in mundane communication, but in a cosmic technology, delivered to humanity by stellar intelligences whose nature has been obscured by time. What tradition has preserved as 'gods' or 'instructors' were, in essence, emissaries of a higher order, and the mythologies of the world are the ritualized echoes of these encounters.

"The human mind, unable to fully comprehend such phenomena, instinctively formalized the fragments of this advanced knowledge into systems of magic and religion. This process is perfectly illustrated by the modern 'cargo cults': isolated peoples, witnessing advanced technology, constructed rituals and replicas in an attempt to summon back its source. In an analogous manner, the ancient peoples ritualized the apparati and communications of non-terrestrial beings. Thus, the runic scripts, the resonant phonemes of Sanskrit, and the sacred diagrams of various traditions are not human inventions, but imperfect replicas, a ceremonial technology meant to interface with a lost source of power."

"Consequently, sacred alphabets are not mere vehicles for writing, but systems of vibrational engineering. Each rune or Sanskrit syllable functions as a glyph of resonance, a key intended to actuate specific forces within the fabric of reality. The myth of Odin discovering the runes while suspended from the World Tree, or the Rishis 'hearing' the Vedas in deep meditation, describes a contact with this supra-human intelligence, a download of a symbolic operating system. The confusion of tongues, recounted in the myth of Babel, signifies not a divine punishment, but the deliberate fragmentation of this unified system to prevent access to the 'source code' of creation. The various sacred alphabets, Futhark, Sanskrit, Ogham, etc, are the surviving lineages of this original Adamantine Language. Therefore, the ultimate purpose of the initiate is not merely to study these symbols, but to reassemble the fragments and reactivate their function, thereby resynchronizing with the cosmic transmitters from whom this knowledge first emanated."

This was a mountain sacred to the Titaness Rhea or Magna Mater, the sister and wife of Cronus or Saturn. Tacitus likewise relates the speculation that the name Judaei, from which Jew is derived, is "the barbarous lengthening of Idaei." Indeed, with the daktyloi Idaioi or Idaeian dactyls, a mythical race of dwarves born of Rhea, we find a symbol for proto-Jews or Jews that appears with the Egyptian Ptah and the Greek Hephaestus, often indicated their master. Not only that, asserted Manners, but Caxuulikom informed those present that the Earth was a farm and nothing else, that energy derived from the souls of the Human Race and indeed from every living creature on the planet was being harvested as a means to feed the minions of Satan, and that the E.T. motif was merely the latest ingenious ruse under which such actions were being secretly undertaken.

"The post-diluvian period is, thus, the era of indirect control. The "Brotherhood" of which Bramley speaks is but the remaining structure of the Elohim, which continues to manage humanity through wars and cultural resets, ensuring its ignorance and servitude (The Wardens). The anomalies cataloged by Charles Fort are the visible residues of this ecosystem of manipulation, flaws in the fabric of an official history that hides our condition as property. The works of Lovecraft, Howard, and Tolkien, as well as the theories of Liebenfels, emerge, therefore, as literary and doctrinal echoes of these archaic events. They are involuntary testimonies to a deeper truth: that humanity is the involuntary heir of a cosmic war, and its history, a palimpsest upon which can still be read, for those who possess the eyes to see, the traces of its origin and its fall."

I find this offensive. I know you Americanos are obsessed with your own media and love smelling your own smugger and farts like the French but your chosen symbolism isn't more important than others.

Also, he does not belong to any particular region, tribe, or nation.

The only thing the Jews can lay claim to is being traitors, whom by consequence has dragged the rest of the planet into their treason by choosing another entity unrelated to the creators of the world.

Pettiness, greed, revenge. Who the fuck knows.

But their god is now Aten.

The image is a digital artwork with a surrealistic style. At the center, there is a figure with a white beard and a grayish complexion, wearing a green robe. The figure appears to be a person with a surprised or shocked expression. The figure is holding two large, rectangular objects that are not clearly visible due to the blurriness. The background is a vibrant green with a swirling, abstract pattern that gives the impression of a magical or mystical aura. The text on the objects is in a non-Latin script, which is not clearly readable. The overall color scheme is predominantly green with hints of yellow and white. The style of the image is reminiscent of digital art from the late 20th century, with a focus on surrealism and fantasy elements.

Searching for the name of god...

>The most common story is that the Rabbi used a shem, a slip of paper with God's name written on it, to keep the golem animated. The shem, placed within the mouth of the golem, gave it life.

>The story begins in medieval Spain. In the late 1200s, a Jewish mystic by the name of Abraham Abulafia sat down at a table in his small house in Barcelona, picked up a quill, dipped it in ink, and began combining the letters of the Hebrew alphabet in strange and seemingly random ways. Aleph with Bet, Bet with Gimmel, Gimmel with Aleph and Bet, and so on.

>Abulafia called this practice "the science of the combination of letters." He wasn't actually combining letters at random; instead he was carefully following a secret set of rules that he had devised while studying an ancient Kabbalistic text called the Sefer Yetsirah. This book describes how God created "all that is formed and all that is spoken" by combining Hebrew letters according to sacred formulas. In one section, God exhausts all possible two-letter combinations of the 22 Hebrew letters.

>By studying the Sefer Yetsirah, Abulafia gained the insight that linguistic symbols can be manipulated with formal rules in order to create new, interesting, insightful sentences. To this end, he spent months generating thousands of combinations of the 22 letters of the Hebrew alphabet and eventually emerged with a series of books that he claimed were endowed with prophetic wisdom.

>But other Jewish scholars considered this rudimentary language generation a dangerous act that bordered on the profane. The Talmud tells stories of rabbis who, by the magical act of permuting language according to the formulas set out in the Sefer Yetsirah, created artificial creatures called golems. In these tales, rabbis manipulated the letters of the Hebrew alphabet to replicate God's act of creation, using the sacred formulas to imbue inanimate objects with life.

>In some of these myths, the rabbis used this skill for practical reasons, to make animals eat when hungry or servants to help them with domestic duties. But many of these golem stories end badly. In one particularly well-known fable, Judah Loew ben Bezalel, the 16th century rabbi of Prague, used the sacred practice of letter combinatorics to conjure a golem to protect the Jewish community from antisemitic attacks, only to see the golem turn violently on him instead.

>This "science of the combination of letters" was a rudimentary form of natural language processing, as it involved combining letters of the Hebrew alphabet according to specific rules. For Kabbalists, it was a double-edged sword: a way to access new forms of knowledge and wisdom, but also an inherently dangerous practice that could bring about unintended consequences.

>This tension reappears throughout the long history of language processing, and still echoes in discussions about the most cutting-edge NLP technology of our digital era. View SameGoogleIqdbSauceNAOTrace Golem_by_Philippe_Semeria.jpg, 106KiB, 500x840

>The first account of a golem being created is of God creating Adam. "In the second hour, [Adam] became a golem... During the third hour, his limbs were stretched out. In the fourth hour, the soul was cast into him..." (B. Sanhedrin 38b). In the Tehillim, the Hebrew word GoLeMi is translated as the process by which God created man. Jeffrey Smith says, "We ourselves are golemim and golemahot until God comes along and makes us fully human, making us living souls by breathing in the 'breath of life.'" It is believed that Abraham studied God's teachings and wrote the Sefer Yetzirah. He studied with Shem, son of Noah, and tradition holds that he created souls with this knowledge.

>Abba Ben Rav Hamma (299-353 C.E.), better known as Rava, studied the Sefer Yetzirah along with Rabbi Zera. They studied for three years, created a cow, forgot the knowledge, studied for another three years, and created another cow. The Talmud goes on to say that Rava has surpassed the need for an assistant. "Rava created a man and sent him to R. Zera. The rabbi spoke to him but he did not answer. Then he said, 'You are from the pietists. Return to your dust.'" (B, Sanhedrin, 65b). This is the only man-shaped golem mentioned in the Talmud. However, In B Sanhedrin 67b it states that every Friday Rabbis Hanina and Hoshia studied the Sefer Yetzira to create a prime calf, which they ate as their Sabbath dinner (Honigsberg).

In Jewish pedo-initiate Spielberg's "AI" (what a pity the infinitely more talented Kubrick couldn't finish it), the robot child's "imprint mode" is activated by pronouncing a cryptographic sequence of ten unrelated words. Did each paranoid warlord have his own army of biorobots whose access keys, generated by the cube, he alone possessed? Did this give rise to an inevitable "arms race" between different "mighty men" that ended with everybody fighting everybody, the last pre-Flood Black Cube destroyed, and the world suddenly overrun with genetically engineered homunculi who had all been programmed with different languages, the keys to which were lost to boot?

First, it is necessary to keep in mind that we need to integrate the geocentric basis of esotericism with a perceived heliocentric reality, because from this stems 80% of the systems and understandings of the astral, divine, demonic, zodiacal, etc. Are we in a closed system or in a vast universe? What is the nature of the Earth? This matters.

To understand source code is to intrinsically understand both the nature and structure of the macrocosm and its reflection, which is us. While this goes beyond whatever parsing the intellect is capable of, intellect and intuition are basis when applied correctly.

So how do we integrate geocentric with heliocentric, closed or vast universe etc. ?
It's both, and can be partly explained by wave-particle duality and superposition, but this doesn't integrate as the separation still stands, even if illusory.

First we'll have to backtrack a bit, go deeper. Most are aware the whole modern physics model is retarded, wave function is deemed nonexistent, pure mathematics, and the bulk of the universe consisting of "dark matter" and "dark energy" is inexplicable. All done deliberately to keep humans ignorant and dependant.

Reductionist scientific methods just keep revealing smaller "particles" that become less and less observable or measurable.

>The Uncertainty Principle, formulated by Werner Heisenberg, states that we can't know the exact position and momentum/velocity of a particle at the same time with perfect accuracy; the more we know about the photon or electrons speed, the less we know about its position, and vice versa.

There is no spoon, only aetheric fields causing apparent perceptual and relative density.

>CHIMin The Elder Scrolls lore represents a state of enlightenment and self-awareness achieved by very few mortals. It's essentially the realization that all of reality is a dream within the mind of the Godhead, Anu. Those who achieve CHIM understand their existence is merely a construct within this dream, but rather than being erased from existence by this truth, they maintain their individuality and self. They effectively become co-creators of their own reality within the larger dream, gaining the ability to reshape the world around them through sheer force of will. It's a precarious state, as acknowledging the Godhead and the nature of reality can also lead to Zero Summing, the complete erasure of one's existence.

Corroborated by Serrano, if the "I" is completely destroyed then all that remains is the demiurge. Think about all these limp-wristed religious faggots, even those with good intent often collaborate with dark cultists; they can not differentiate, towards some utopian delusion that will never eventuate. Seldom redpilled, Savitri Devi noted their inability to act.

>But what Esoteric Hitlerism can not forget is that incarnation, sacrifice, the 'falling in love of the Aesir with the daughters of men,' by the 'she' imprisoned by the Demiurge, may be more than a defeat, a fall, more a strategy favored to win Immortality and Resurrection in the final Combat that, without thinking or dreaming as much, has made possible 'something never imagined by even the greatest utopians...' Always when the 'I' is not destroyed."

The image is a nighttime photograph capturing a celestial event. In the center of the frame, there is a bright, elongated object that appears to be a shooting star or meteor. This object is surrounded by a bright, red glow that radiates outward from its center, creating a striking contrast against the dark sky. The glow is so intense that it illuminates the surrounding area, creating a dramatic effect.

The background of the image is dominated by a dark sky filled with stars, which suggests that the event is occurring in outer space. The sky is not completely dark, as there are bright patches of light scattered throughout, possibly indicating the presence of a planet or another celestial body.

In the foreground, there is a landscape with a few trees and a field, providing a sense of scale to the grandeur of the celestial event. The trees and field are silhouetted against the bright glow of the shooting star, further emphasizing its prominence in the image. There are no visible texts or discernible human-made objects in the image, and the style of the photograph is realistic, capturing the natural beauty of the scene without any artistic filters or alterations. The image is a testament to the awe-inspiring power of celestial events and the beauty of the natural world.

Accuate, dream is exactly how I experienced this life, waking up was exponentially more real than this, as is this life to our own dreams. Hence an experience that cannot be denied personally. Reality is literally a dream, stepped down reflections related to the 72 winds that manifest reality.

Often wondered how many layers its stepped down: a dream of a dream of a dream, at least 3 from my own experience, but nothing I saw would negate the possibility of more layers. First dream is demiurge, not base reality, so at least one beyond that.

Must be a war in heaven to some extent as described, or we would not be doing what we are. The black sun is the pineal gland, the single eye cut off by the fall into duality and stranded in the underworld. The moon is the left eye and the sun the right, as per general esoteric cosmology. As with the actual model, light is projected by the black sun/pineal and reflected/rendered by the sun and moon/eyes. A secondary interaction that is considered primary, shadows on the wall of the cave. This has always been the esoteric understanding of sight and the pineal gland, the all seeing eye.

nerve as mediator. Not only is the information restricted...

>The pineal gland perceives reality in its pure quantum holographic (aetheric) form. This perception goes far beyond our immediate surroundings encompassing probabilities, timelines, and extra dimensional lifeforms.

>That perception is then blended with the point of view of the perceiver. In psychoanalytic language: external reality is blended with our unconscious reality.

Seems like a shit deal, and it is, especially because it has been co-opted and manipulated by the demiurge and Saturnian black rock cultists, but the original split was a fall and the operating system reflects this downgrade. Ultimately the Anima is absolutely loyal and works in our best interests to the best of her ability. The amount of data that is filtered can and does break peoples minds if perceived all at once ie. >In the second site we found a natural vibration of geological origin coming from subsoil affecting mind. We found this by traditional archaeoacoustic method (digital recorders and ultra-sensitive microphones). Normally low frequencies can affect mind because interfering with brain wave which have a low frequency of movement. We also must remember that brain activity is not only electric, but also magnetic, so also magnetic fields who very frequently match geological vibrations can modify the state of mind.

>In our researches we demonstrated that some physical phenomena (vibrations, magnetic fields) present at such sites, can influence brain activity

The image displays a page from an ancient manuscript, likely from the Middle Ages, given the style of the writing and the presence of a compass rose. The page is filled with handwritten text and diagrams, predominantly in Latin. The text is written in a script that is characteristic of the medieval era, with some cursive and others in a more formal, scripted style. The diagrams include a compass rose, which is a tool used to measure angles and distances, and a spherical diagram, which is a representation of a sphere. The page is divided into two columns, with the left column containing the text and the right column containing the diagrams. The page is old and worn, with some areas of discoloration and fading, suggesting it has been exposed to the elements for a long time. The overall style of the image is historical and academic, with a focus on the historical and scientific aspects of the manuscript.

>Archaeoacoustics should therefore not only consider analyzing the acoustic properties of the site, but also all the associated physical phenomena which is not perceived by the ears which could potentially influence a population and their perception of a particular site as being sacred. Using such technologies, we observed a change of emotional state in various volunteers after they remained for some time in sacred sites especially by vibration, audible (as a chant or a drum) in particular in connection with resonance phenomenon or not audible (natural infrasounds, ultrasounds). So it looks that mechanical vibrations are only one aspect of the possibility for affecting human mind, because also magnetic fields can affect human mind.

The image is a black and white illustration featuring a large, tentacled creature with multiple tentacles and a prominent eye. The creature appears to be emerging from a dark, rocky landscape with a narrow, pointed archway leading into it. The archway is flanked by two smaller, more slender arches on either side. The creature's tentacles are intertwined and extend outwards, creating a sense of chaos and movement.

In the background, there are other elements that contribute to the overall dark and mysterious atmosphere. There are jagged, jagged lines and shapes that resemble otherworldly structures or creatures, suggesting a fantastical or otherworldly setting.

The image is framed by a dark, swirling border that adds to the dramatic effect.

At the bottom of the image, there is text that reads "YOG-SOITH," which could be a title or a name associated with the artwork. The text is in a bold, capitalized font that stands out against the monochrome background. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of the dark fantasy genre, with its use of dark colors and intricate details.

Therefore this is way to navigate the exit from the soul trap, a thought borne out by both Western and Eastern esoteric traditions of ascent.

The image is a painting that depicts a chaotic scene of a city under siege. The cityscape is filled with buildings that appear to be in ruins, with some structures partially collapsed or burning. The sea is turbulent with waves crashing against the shore, and there are numerous figures in the foreground, some of whom appear to be fleeing or running away from the chaos.

In the foreground, there is a large statue of a figure with a green hat, which seems to be holding a large shield or a weapon. The statue is positioned on a raised platform, and the figure is facing towards the right side of the painting. The background is dominated by a large, dark, and ominous sky with clouds, and the overall color palette is dominated by dark tones, with the exception of the green hat of the statue.

The painting style is realistic with a focus on the details of the city and the actions of the figures. The genre of the artwork is historical, likely depicting a scene from ancient or medieval times, given the architectural style and the overall atmosphere of the scene.

There are no visible texts or inscriptions within the image.

The hymn the Egyptians sung was known as the music of the spheres, its provenance ancient, from Atlantis before the sea swallowed its now sunken shores.

>In Egypt the priests, when singing hymns in praise of the gods, employ the seven vowels, which they utter in due succession; and the sound of these letters is so euphonious that men listen to it in place of aulos and cithara." (DeElocutione - Demetrius)

>Pythagorean numerology of Nicomachus of Gerasa, vowels are unspeakable and related to the consonants as the soul is related to the body.

"The sacred language of the tantras is mantra. This means that the syllables that comprise a word resonate to a pitch that evokes the prototypical nature of the form that is being articulated. When the master is questioned on this point, he is evasive regarding the specific relationship between sound and form. But there is no ignoring his conviction that sound is intimately related to the realm of form and has the power to affect it. The Indian story of one of the great ustad sitarists of an earlier generation, whose instrument burst into flame during a perfect rendition of a fire raga, is explained in terms of the ustad's ability to reproduce the sound of the seed-syllable of the element fire precisely, so creating fire itself. However, it is a general principle in many sacred traditions that it is not so much the form of the consonants as the power and thoughtform inserted into the vowel sound by a master, a siddha, that is efficacious. That the resonance that vibrates in an inanimate object, such as a fine wine glass, a conch shell, or a singing bowl, is of the nature of vowels rather than consonants supports this notion." (Flight of the Garuda)

>The seven vowels celebrate me, the great imperishable God, indefatigable Father of All. I am the imperishable lyre, having tuned the lyric songs of the celestial vortex. (Eusebius)

The image is a screenshot of a text document, specifically a page from a book or article. The page is titled "Monkey's Business" and is numbered 77. The text is written in English and discusses the concept of the "monkey's business" in relation to the creation of the first written language.

The text is divided into two main sections. The first section is titled "Monkey's Business" and is numbered 77. It begins with a statement that defines the concept of the "monkey's business" as "the secret, Hermetic first makes an innovation, passing God's word to the monkey, and the monkey, in turn, passes it to the monkey's father, who passes it to the monkey's mother, and so on, until the monkey receives the word, 17:21."

The second section is titled "Monkey's Business" and is numbered 78. It continues the discussion of the "monkey's business" and discusses the creation of the first written language. It mentions that the "monkey's business" is the creation of the first written language, which is "the secret, Hermetic first makes an innovation, passing God's word to the monkey, and the monkey, in turn, passes it to the monkey's father, who passes it to the monkey's mother, and so on, until the monkey receives the word, 17:21."

The text also includes a diagram labeled "Fig. 1: The two series of words, with number further." The diagram shows two pyramids with the words "monkey's business" written on them, with the words "monkey's business" written in the first pyramid and "monkey's business" written in the second pyramid.

The text is written in a formal and academic style, with references to various sources such as "J. G. F. Hutton, The Origin of Writing and the Writing of Man, the 'Flower of the Garden of Eden' and the 'Tree of Life,' in 'The Book of Genesis,' 1928, London: Kegan Paul, 2:24." and "J. G. F. Hutton, 'The Origin of Writing and the Writing of Man,' in 'The Book of Genesis,' 1928, London: Kegan Paul, 2:24."

The text is in a larger font size compared to the surrounding text, which is typical for academic or formal documents. The page number "46" is visible at the top right corner of the image, indicating that this is a screenshot from a larger document. The image is in portrait orientation, and the text is in a dark color, which contrasts with the lighter background, making the text easily readable.

>The vowels and nomina barbara appear in a context where Hermes and his son are seeking admittance to the Ogdoad, the eighth sphere above the fixed stars. The son of Hermes is normally called Tat in the other Hermetic treatises, and I will refer to him as such in the following. In On the rebirth, Tat was reborn as constituted of ten divine powers, and Hermes promised him that he would be able to see the Ogdoad if he applied himself. This promise is made good on in the present treatise.

>Before the ascent, Hermes first makes an invocation, praising God's creative and ruling power and calling him «the invisible god to whom one speaks in silence», and then utters the first string of vowels framed by the two nomina barbara. After this, Tat receives the vision of the Ogdoad and of the Ennead, which are described enthusiastically, if not quite systematically. At the end of the visionary ascent we find the second string of vowels, this time with no nomina barbara. Note that the vowels are not divided into separate lines in the manuscript, but are given continuously. The stylistic arrangement of the vowels can however be found in the magical papyri, and it is likely that their original arrangement was something like this (picrel)

>We have to take not the angle velocities, as Kepler did, but the orbital velocities (e.g. the Earth circles round the Sun). By calculating these velocities at those points where the planets are at the distance of their semi-minor axis from the Sun and relating these with the aphelion (when the planet is farthest from the Sun) velocities, we find a very precise correspondence with musical intervals. The probability of this result being purely by chance is only about 1:1600. In other words, there is a certainty of 99.9% that this is proof that the harmony of the spheres, believed to exist by Pythagoras, Kepler and many others, is more than a 'beautiful dream' as it is often called in scientific literature. It can be found in the concrete orbital data. (Signature of the Celestial Spheres)

>Cuneiform tablets translated since the early 1960s have allowed music archaeologists to reconstruct the Mesopotamian tonal system. The consensus is that, for over a millennium, from at least 1800 BC onward, the Mesopotamians used seven diatonic modes — scales that are closely related to the Western, sevennote major scale. Furthermore, the Mesopotamian method of re-tuning stringed instruments from one mode to another, created five extra pitches that correspond with what, in the West, are called sharps and flats. On one particular tablet, these notes are understood to be generated as consecutive "fifths," suggesting that the "cycle of fifths" — a circular arrangement of the twelve pitches that make up an octave — was known to the Mesopotamians.

Here we find origin of the seven days of the week, Germanic/Roman syncretism in modern terms. Intrinsic to the Mesopotamian tonal system is the sequence 4,1,5,2,6,3,7, which produces the circle of fifths, and was later taught to Pythagoras. Take the number sequence and overlay it on orbital frequency (picrel) to find the days of the week, the Mithraic/alchemical order of ascent through the spheres, and basis of the chakras.

>In Timaeus, Plato's treatise on Pythagorean cosmology, the central character, Timaeus of Locri (possibly a real person), describes how the Demiurge divided the World Soul into harmonic intervals. Having blended the three ingredients of the World Soul — Sameness, Difference and Existence — into a kind of malleable stuff, the Demiurge took a strip of it and divided its length into portions measured by the numbers forming two geometrical series of four terms each: 1, 2, 4, 8 and 1, 3, 9, 27, generated by multiplying 1 by 2 and 3 (Fig. 1). This became known as "Plato's Lambda" because of its resemblance to Λ , the Greek letter lambda. Then, according to Timaeus:

"he went on to fill up both the double and the triple intervals, cutting off yet more parts from the original mixture and placing them between the terms, so that within each interval there were two means, the one (harmonic)* exceeding the one extreme and being exceeded by the other by the same fraction of the extremes, the other (arithmetic) exceeding the one extreme by the same number whereby it was exceeded by the other. These linksgave rise to intervals of $3/2$ and $4/3$ and $9/8$ within the original intervals. And he went on to fill up all the intervals of $4/3$ (i.e., fourths) with the interval of $9/8$ (the tone), leaving over in each a fraction. This remaining interval of the fraction had its terms in the numerical proportion of 256 to 243 (semitone). By this time, the mixture from which he was cutting off these portions was all used up"

In the bottom part of the image, there are two diagrams. The first diagram is labeled "Figure 2: The Lendla Tetraktys." It shows a triangle with a red line running through it, indicating the frequency of the notes of the Tetrachord. The second diagram is labeled "Figure 3: The Lendla Tetraktys." It is a graphical representation of the Tetrachord, with the red line running through it.

The image is a digital representation, likely used for educational or informational purposes, and it is designed to convey the concept of the Tetrachord in a clear and concise manner.

Reason why the Lambda has no wiki page while every faggot jew you have never heard of does.

>The three numbers missing from the Lambda are shown in red inFigure2. The sumofthe 10integers is 90 and the sum of the integers 1, 8 & 27 at the corners of the tetractys is36. The seven integers at the centre and corners of the grey hexagon shown in Figure 2 with dashed edges add up to 54. Hence, the36:54 division displayed by the Lambda Tetractys differentiates between itscorners, which correspond to the Supernal Triad of the Tree of Life,and its seven hexagonal yods,which correspond to the seven Sephiroth ofConstruction (seehere).The division is shown by all holistic systems, as many of the articles on this website prove. Historians of science and musical scholars have focussed upon the integers as "number weights" whose significance is that their ratios are the tone ratios of the notes of the Pythagorean musical scale. They paid no attention to themagnitudeof the numbers themselves because, influenced by the connotation given by Plato that their ratios determined the more important tone ratios, they seemed to have no relevance to music or anything else. The author's research into various sacred geometries and holistic systems indicates that this is untrue. The number 90 is always present in such systems as a defining parameter, as this section will demonstrate.

>The Lambda Tetractys has been regarded as nothing more than a heuristic device for generating the tone ratios of musical notes. Instead, it has profound, fundamental meaning, for — together with its tetrahedral generalisation to be described shortly — it characterizes the very nature of holistic systems.

>It is the arithmetic counterpart of the holistic pattern that sacred geometries embody.

Below the title, there is a large, dark, black silhouette of a planet with a bright, white sun in the center, surrounded by a ring of stars. The planet appears to be in a space setting with a view of the Earth below.

In the foreground, there is a large, metallic, futuristic spacecraft with a pointed nose and a large, circular, metallic structure on its side. The spacecraft is surrounded by smaller spacecraft and other space debris, suggesting a space battle or conflict.

The background of the poster is a dark, starry sky with a large, dark, black silhouette of a planet with a bright, white sun in the center, surrounded by a ring of stars. The overall color scheme of the poster is predominantly dark, with the exception of the bright, white sun and the metallic spacecraft, which stand out against the dark background.

At the bottom of the poster, there is a website address in white text:

"www.IronSky4.net." The style of the image is realistic with a focus on space and science fiction elements.

Working my way through the archived threads. Can I pls have a for real answer why circumcision is a thing. Or a compelling theory. My parents had to fight hard to keep the hospital stuff from knifing my shit, for this and many other reasons I love them dearly.

My first girlfriend, a Slavic Jew who took my virginity, used to call me "donkey dick" ...

What does it all mean?

Lucky to have discerning parents anon.

As with most things these creatures do there is exoteric and esoteric "justifications" for circumcision, trauma and dissociation, induced sexual dysfunction leading to degeneracy, covenant with yhwh for jews, ritual slave brand for Aryans, energetic implant/seal of Saturn etc. At base its more in line with the jewish female tradition, dark Venus/Asherah, Lilith and lunar energy, blood magic and vampirism, old practices from the groves. They use the blood from circumcision and sacrifice for various rituals and magic cures.

>rather than explain the need for the blood of a Christian child, the defendants were attempting to provide a description of the wonderful therapeutic and magical properties of blood generally, and of blood extracted from children and young persons in particular >Camporesi wrote, "a sacred and alchemistic haemostatic, blood (and not incorrectly, in epochs in which hemorrhages represented a terrible tragedy, was considered a powerful healant"

Blood from the young has scientifically proven curative properties when transfused, and was often consumed with this in mind eg. Elizabeth Báthory. Even with non-jews does anyone know what really happens to the foreskins afterwards, you know, besides the skin cream.

>Are foreskins used in cosmetics; is a question that has been asked numerous times. The answer to this controversial topic is yes, and it may come as a surprise to many. Foreskins contain fibroblasts, which are cells that produce collagen and other proteins necessary for skin care products.

Jews are vampires with high levels of blood lust, likely related to Neanderthal genetics. There seems to be dual reasoning and single cannibalistic purpose, they used the powdered blood of sacrificed Aryans to stop bleeding and cure circumcision wounds of their own infants, then drank and bathed in their own infants blood while consuming the foreskins.

>The physician Giuseppe di Riva del Garda, known as the “hunchbacked Jew”, who had circumcised Angelo’s sons, normally used it during the course of the holy operation. Obviously, Maestro Tobias, who rightly considered himself a medical expert, also knew how to prepare the magic haemostatic: “You take the blood, allowing it to coagulate; then you dry it and make a powder out of it, which can be used in so many different ways”.

>The Jews accused of ritual child murder at Tyrnau in Hungary in 1494 also declared, among other things, that they had used powdered blood as a circumcision haemostatic

>He then takes a glass of wine [...] and bathes the infant's mouth with the wine in which he spat out the sucked blood

>It is at this point”, the rabbinical response continues, “that all the young males wash themselves in that water, in memory of the blood of the pact, which has united God to our patriarch Abraham”. In this rite, of a propitiatory nature, the blood from the circumcision wound, united with the sweet-smelling potion, is said to have possessed the ability to transform itself into a potent aphrodisiac

While all this is less prevalent these days amongst average jews it still goes on, especially in Orthodox and elite circles.

>One form of magical cannibalism, related to circumcision, may be found in a custom highly widespread among both the Ashkenazi Jewish communities and [Jewish?] communities of the Mediterranean region. The women present at the circumcision ceremony but not yet blessed with progeny of the male sex, anxiously awaited the cutting of the foreskin of the child. At this point, throwing inhibition to the winds, as if at a pre-established signal, the women hurled themselves upon that piece of bloody flesh. The luckiest woman is alleged to have snatched it up and gulped it down immediately, before she could be mobbed by the competing females, who must have been no less hardened and highly motivated. The triumphant winner was in no doubt whatever that the proud tit-bit would be infallibly useful in causing the much-coveted virile member to germinate inside the impregnated abdomen through sympathetic medicine.

>Neo said to the Architect in the Matrix the problem is choice. The Architect says The Oracle came up with the solution. The Oracle(The Moon) is the body that modulates incoming planetary emissions that affect us and allow free will. Between the Sefirot and the Qlippoth.

>When the Architect tells Neo that the previous versions of the Matrix failed because they were "too perfect" (The Golden Age), he is describing the collapse of the Saturnian frequency. The "Oracle" (the Moon/Lunar Program) was introduced to manage the "human choice" variable through Emotional Entrainment.

>The Arcadians, known as Proselenes ("Before the Moon")as the Greeks like Plato write, claimed their ancestors inhabited the Earth before the Moon existed.

>The Function: It acts as a "Frequency Damper." By controlling the tides of both the oceans and human blood (which is 90% water), the Moon regulates the "Mood" of the realm. This is the "Oracle Program" that solved the instability of the earlier versions. It keeps us in a cycle of reincarnation and emotional harvesting (Loosh).

The moon is artificial, yes, it was built.

"We will be entering an euhemerist perspective, so keep in mind that we will be talking about a vast three-dimensional space, with multiple realms and star systems, not the geocentric system. We will be talking about the vast universe, within the understanding of the electrical universe, hollow celestial bodies, etc."

>Most people are fully aware that the Moon is tiny compared to the Sun, but that it is much closer to us, causing them to appear as equal discs. To be precise, the Moon is 400 times smaller than the star at the centre of our solar system, yet it is also just 1/400th of the distance between the Earth and the Sun. Whilst the surprisingly neat number of 400 for relative size and distance is apparently an amusing coincidence of the decimal counting system, the odds against this optical illusion happening at all are huge. Experts are deeply puzzled by the phenomenon. Isaac Asimov, the respected scientist and science-fiction guru, described this perfect visual alignment as being "the most unlikely coincidence imaginable." This perfect fit of the lunar and solar discs is a very human perspective because it only works from the viewpoint of someone standing on the Earth's surface. But the magic of the Moon's movements above our heads goes to even more astonishing levels. By some absolutely incomprehensible quirk of nature, the Moon also manages to precisely imitate the perceived annual movements of the Sun each month.

>The best explanation for the Moon is observational error – the Moon does not exist!

Attributed to Irwin Shapiro of The Harvard-Smithsonian Center for Astrophysics

>The Big Whack cannot explain the extraordinary ratio relationship between the Moon and the Sun or the Moon and the Earth. The Moon could, by pure chance, end up being exactly 1/400th the size of the Sun and occupying an orbit that allows it to stand 1/400th the distance between the Earth and the Sun – but the odds are, quite literally, astronomically against it. The Moon is proportionally bigger in relation to its host planet than any other in the solar system, apart from Charon, Pluto's moon, which is more than half the diameter of Pluto. These two bodies are essentially twin planets or may be asteroids orbiting each other at close range, although they are believed to have an unrelated origin. Mercury has no moons at all, and neither has Venus. Mars does have two moons, but they are tiny in comparison with our own.

>Another study looked into human aggression and the lunar synodic cycle occurring in Dade County, Florida. Data on five aggressive and/or violent human behaviours were examined to determine whether a relationship existed between the two. These included looking at the pattern of homicides, suicides, fatal traffic accidents, aggravated assaults, and psychiatric emergency room visits.

>The team concluded that homicides and aggravated assaults demonstrated a statistically significant clustering of cases around the full Moon. Psychiatric emergency room visits clustered around the first quarter and showed a significantly decreased frequency around new and full Moon. The suicide curve showed correlations with both aggravated assaults and fatal traffic accidents, suggesting, they say, a self-destructive component for each of these behaviours. The existence of a biological rhythm of human aggression, which resonates with the lunar synodic cycle, was postulated.

"The book I'm citing is written by a physicalist author who accepts evolutionary interpretations and much of the historiography, stratigraphy, etc. Logically, it's distorted and contaminated by materialist subversion, however, he is correct in identifying that this solar system underwent planetary engineering, something we will observe in the book Saturn Death Cult (not by intelligence, but by natural causes) and in Ringmakers of Saturn... The mistake of those who speak of the theory of the electric universe where our system was captured by the sun is believing that it was purely a natural process; it wasn't. There was a race of forerunners who built this system; Christopher Knight calls them UCA."

>The UCA realized that it needed to draw further attention to the artificial nature of the regulator by building on a truly fundamental number that represented the planet. The number that was chosen was the planet's spin rate per orbit of the star, which would have to be instantly recognizable as a value that was unique to the planet – a natural PIN (personal identification number) for an entire world. So, in this case, it was a Planetary Identification Number that was required. At the required time window, the planet would be rotating at a rate of 366 revolutions for each orbit around its mother star, and the use of the number value 366 would therefore be easily spotted as the Planetary Identification Number.

>The intelligent creatures would recognize the PIN number from an early date, as it requires only very basic astronomy to appreciate that this three-digit number is the most fundamental of all numbers that are unique to the planet. Surely these Earth-dwelling creatures would be very surprised when they calculated the relative size of their planet to the orbiting regulator and discovered that the one is 366 per cent larger than the other. The regulator was also engineered with a PIN number that was meaningful to the intended intelligent creatures. That number would be the reciprocal of the planet's PIN number – the mirror image of 366. The mathematics was simplicity itself. The regulator's PIN number would be arrived at by considering its size as 100 per cent and dividing it by the relative size of the planet, namely 366 per cent. Working to five decimal places, the result is: $100/366 = 0.27322$

>The regulator was then carefully engineered so that at the key point in time it would be orbiting the planet at a rate of once every 27.322 planetary days.

"The Moon is literally, in both models of existence (geocentric and heliocentric), the fluidic mirror where the "simulation" of the matrix is projected onto the earth, from the computational "calculations" of destiny woven in Saturn. Or vice versa, where it is rendered on the imaginal fluidic plane on the moon and then projected onto Saturn, written in destiny, then descends to earth, "calcifying" samsara."

"If the builders of the Moon are evil, and the solar gods that came later are a deliberate confusion, who remains?"

"The answer lies in what we call the "good instructors and aryan ancestors." They would be neither "lunar" nor "solar" in the later, corrupted sense of these terms. They would belong to a prior and superior order, perhaps associated with a pre-lunar and pre-material state of consciousness (the "Pelasgians" and "Proselenes" of legend)."

"Their symbol, therefore, would not be the Sun or the Moon of our current sky (which are pieces of the machine), but something like:"

- >The "Black Light" or "Black Sun" (a spiritual, non-physical sun).
- >The "Polar Star" (a fixed axis outside the system of cycles).
- >The "Void" or "The Source" prior to the creation of the material Matrix.

"In the sky of this simulation, solar archetypes are presented as the "good" alternative to the "evil" lunar ones. But the true exit, according to the text's radical cosmology, lies in rejecting the entire artificial sky and seeking the origin that is prior and external to it."

Considered to be an analogue computer with gear ratios representing the harmony of the spheres and Pythagorean cosmology, the Antikythera mechanism (200 BC) tracks complex astrological data, including the elliptical movement of the moon, something not "discovered" by Kepler until 1620 AD. With no known antecedent technology scientists claim to be baffled as to provenance, all the while ignoring the textual evidence of steampunk style automations, near perfect "mechanical men" and many other described devices indicative of lost tech and fallen civilization.

Obviously these scientists, these brilliant luminaries of post modern excellence, are unable to follow thought to logical conclusion. Sometimes a sign of complicity, but more likely the frequency derived obfuscation of mind fuckery. Why, because this specific case is so obvious, in plain sight with bells and whistles, driven by gears of course.

The Antikythera is usually matched to the first clocks in the 1400's, these things were actually pieces of shit. It is far more advanced, being described as a calculator, which involves added layers of complexity when compared to single function timekeeping. Counting vs calculating.

The first analogue mathematical calculator was invented by Blaise Pascal in 1642. So ancient Greek tech was at least at this level.

Those texts I mentioned, along with recent investigations into fallen civilizations, tell a far different story though, of complexity yet unmatched in "modern" days.

>Over 120 years ago, sponge divers off the coast of the Greek island Antikythera unearthed one of the most enigmatic technological artifacts in human history. Hidden among statues, coins, glassware, and jewelry from a Roman-era shipwreck was a corroded cluster of bronze gears.

>Initially mistaken for debris, this fragmented object would later be identified as the Antikythera mechanism—a shoebox-sized device that has stunned archaeologists, engineers, and physicists for decades. Now housed at the National Archaeological Museum in Athens, the mechanism is often described as the world's first analog computer.

>It once displayed a model of the cosmos so precise and intricate that some have compared it to modern clockwork. For scientists and historians, the device represents a vivid example of how advanced ancient Greek astronomy and engineering really were.

>The Antikythera Mechanism, often called an ancient "computer," continues to ignite debates among experts. This astonishing device, uncovered in a shipwreck in 1901, suggests that advanced technology existed over two millennia ago, shocking historians and scientists alike.

> used to calculate and predict eclipse decades and astronomical events in advance. Besides celestial observation, this advanced mechanism was used to display the positions of the planets, sun, and moon in the sky. Archaeologists and researchers predict it to be manufactured in ~100 B.C.E.

>One expert remarked, "The craftsmanship rivals modern mechanisms. It's an incredible feat for its time." Growing interest has fueled discussions about ancient civilizations' technological capabilities.

The image is a meme featuring two separate scenes. In the upper part, there is a wolf-like creature with a long tail standing in a foggy field. The wolf appears to be looking towards the viewer, and its fur is a dark color. The background is a muted greenish color, and the sky is overcast.

In the lower part of the image, there is a text overlay that reads "Satanic Pedophilia Elites" in a bold, capitalized font. Below this text, there is a subtitle that reads "Internet Racists" in a smaller, lowercase font. The text is in a yellow color, which stands out against the green background.

The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, using a combination of visual elements to convey a message about the nature of certain individuals and their actions. The wolf in the upper part is a common symbol associated with the supernatural or mythical, while the text in the lower part is a play on the term "internet racists," which is a derogatory term used to describe people who engage in racist behavior online. The use of the wolf in the upper part could be seen as a metaphor for the wolfish behavior of certain individuals, while the text in the lower part could be seen as a commentary on

On the subject of automatons, 95% of human decision making is unconscious, by monitoring brain activity studies have accurately predicted decisions up to 11 sec before they are consciously made. As mentioned earlier our species, constructed of clay, was considered a golem until life was breathed in via source code technology.

Have to wonder how much that operational 5% has been lost through attrition over time, obviously a lot of the autonomous nervous system works that way for a reason, conscious interference being inimicable. But how about yogis controlling breath, heart rate, and body temperature, or stories of pharmakeia priestesses altering their very internal chemical and energetic composition in order to produce various compounds as spiritual engineering, cures, and relating to that mysterious process of creating artificial life.

Seems the conscious portion of the mind is shrinking, and in many, just a fading memory, almost gone.

"It is considered, in light of a certain heterodox tradition, that divine archetypes represent transcendent operative principles, whose symbolic understanding was, in remote epochs, applied in an effective manner. The goddesses mentioned, Artemis of Ephesus, Isis, Aphrodite, Cybele, embody diverse facets of a single principle: the Autonomous Primordial Matrix, that is, the capacity for the generation of life independent of the paradigm of complementary duality."

"This potency is not merely allegorical. The statuary of Artemis, with its multiple breasts or eggs, and its association with the Melissae (bees), configures a precise symbolism of a serialized production of life, a ritually conducted parthenogenesis. In an analogous manner, the myth of Isis, who through the utterance of formulas restores life and generates Horus, reveals a protocol of magical insemination or ritual cloning, where the verb and knowledge replace ordinary biological means. Aphrodite, emerging from the fertilized sea foam, and Cybele, mistress of the fertile chaos, complete this picture, illustrating generation from primordial substances and vectors of pure desire."

"The beehive, therefore, emerges as the perfect model of this organic economy: a collective, hierarchical, and chemically controlled womb, where the queen, via pheromones, an intuitive hormonal engineering, ensures the continuity of life. The cosmic egg, a universal symbol, is the iconographic representation of this principle of autonomous incubation."

>One such ancient story centers on the bronze sentry Talos. Forged by Hephaestus, the Greek god of smiths and artisans, Talos was said to have guarded the island of Crete, off the coast of Greece. He patrolled the beaches three times a day, throwing boulders at enemy ships to ward off unwanted visitors to King Minos' domain.

>The Argonautica, an epic poem written by Apollonius of Rhodes in the third century B.C.E., chronicles the adventures of Jason and the Argonauts, including their encounter with Talos. After retrieving the legendary golden fleece, the heroes attempt to land on Crete's shores but find themselves blocked by Talos. Jason's lover, the sorceress Medea, starts singing, invoking "the death spirits, devourers of life, the swift hounds of Hades," according to a 20th-century translation of the Argonautica. She then directs "her hostile glance" toward Talos, bewitching him into grazing his ankle, which holds his only vulnerability.

>"Talos for a while stood on his tireless feet, swaying to and fro, then at last, all strengthless, fell with a mighty thud," the translation states. In some ways, this interaction might seem like a typical anecdote of an ancient hero and heroine meeting a divinely created obstacle and outsmarting their enemy. Entities magically endowed with life by the gods are not a rarity in Greek myth. Consider, for example, Galatea, a statue of a woman sculpted by Pygmalion as art, then brought to life by Aphrodite.

>Unlike Galatea, whose "realism became reality supernaturally," Talos was not merely created "by magic spells or divine fiat," writes Mayor. He was said to be engineered by Hephaestus, or rather "made, not born," in a process the ancients "might have called biotechné, from bios 'life' and techné, 'crafted through art or science.'"

>Talos was depicted in myth as a machine programmed to act human though never capable of achieving regular human life—what one might call a robot today.

>The Argonautica describes Talos' internal computational system in depth, outlining some of the wiring necessary to build a machine of this kind. "Now in all the rest of his body and limbs was he fashioned of bronze and invulnerable," the translation notes, "but beneath the sinew by his ankle was a blood-red vein, and this, with its issues of life and death, was covered by a thin skin."

>This "vein," perhaps better visualized as a tube, transported ichor, the ethereal liquid that flowed through the bodies of the ancient Greek gods. A nail or a bolt held the system together at Talos' ankle. In a sense, this ichor functioned like a power source or electricity, circulating through the robot's bronze limbs and fueling his movements and actions. If Talos' internal engineering was in any way disturbed, he would malfunction.

>"Talos, like modern ideas of cyborgs, ... was envisioned as a hybrid of living and nonliving parts," Mayor writes. "Through myths like that of Talos, ancients could contemplate whether an entity 'made, not born' was simply a mindless machine or an autonomous, sentient intelligence."

"Examples of automatons in ancient Greek myth abound. Homer's Iliad describes similarly advanced devices crafted by Hephaestus, including gold tripods that moved of their own volition and "female forms ... that moved and breathed in animated gold," anticipating the gods' needs and responding accordingly. Daedalus, the inventor who designed Minos' Labyrinth as a prison for the half-man, half-bull Minotaur, was said to have developed animated statues that rivaled Hephaestus' mechanical servants."

>What differentiates Talos from other legendary automatons, says Mayor, is the fact that he was the first such mythical being sent to earth to interact with humans. Unlike Hephaestus' self-moving tripods and golden women, which served the Olympian gods, Talos was exposed to humans for an extended period of time, and this seemingly led him to adopt some of their traits.

>Like Talos, Pandora, an artificial woman in Greek myth who had been manufactured from earthly materials by Hephaestus, was “made, not born.” Sent to earth to punish humankind for accepting the gift of fire from the Titan Prometheus, Pandora had a single mission, Mayor says: “to be accepted into human society and then open [a] jar full of miseries.” While Talos’ time among humans influenced his way of thinking, Pandora never adapted to her environment or pursued a course of action unrelated to her purpose. In this way, Mayor argues, Pandora is akin to an A.I. agent created solely for infiltration and disruption.

The image is a composite of two separate photographs. In the upper portion, there is a photograph of a landscape with a fiery sky and a large, illuminated structure that resembles a Hollywood sign. The sign is prominently displayed in the center of the image. The background is a dark, smoky sky with orange and yellow hues, suggesting a fire or a similar natural disaster.

In the lower portion of the image, there is a close-up of a young girl's face. She has brown hair and is looking directly at the camera with a neutral expression. Her eyes are open, and she has a slight smile. The girl's face is partially obscured by the Hollywood sign in the upper photograph.

The image does not contain any text that can be read. The style of the image is a blend of a photograph of a landscape with a sign and a close-up of a person, creating a juxtaposition between the natural and the man-made elements. The colors in the image are warm, with the fiery sky and the smoky background, and the girl's face is in a neutral tone.

The image is a simple, stylized illustration of a stylized red object that resembles a stylized bird or bird-like creature. The object has a curved body with a pointed beak and a tail that curls around the body. The body of the object is red, and the beak and tail are white. There is a red spiral pattern on the body of the object, which is a common design element in art and design. The background of the image is white, which contrasts with the red object, making it stand out. There are no texts or additional elements in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of ancient Egyptian hieroglyphs, which often featured stylized representations of animals or deities.

>Monatomic transition-group elements were classified some time ago as "exotic matter" because they have a negative energy density and the ability to manipulate space-time. Physicists now say that exotic matter is the key to travelling enormous distances—seemingly faster than the speed of light, but with an acceleration rate of zero. They are looking at the concept of moving the space instead of the spacecraft—that is to say, contracting space-time in front of the ship, with a commensurate expansion of the space-time behind it. NASA's Breakthrough Propulsion Physics Project is leading the research in this regard. We also have the aircraft industry investigating the concept of antigravity flight. Monatomic elements are operative high-temperature superconductors, and superconductors will levitate. They have a null magnetic field and will repel external magnetic fields. The Center for Advanced Study in Illinois has classified superconductivity as "the most remarkable physical property in the universe

In physical terms both the red and white elixirs are generally considered to consist of monatomic high spin state molecules.

"They certainly knew about monatomic elements and superconductors, even if they didn't understand the science behind them. There were various names and terms for these phenomena in different cultures. As for the scientific aspects, maybe they didn't know specifically that these magical powders resonated with DNA or that they were immune system enhancers but they undoubtedly knew of their healing and anti-ageing properties. They also told of levitation, movement into parallel dimensions, communication with gods, and the like. In so many instances, their descriptions were commensurate with modern scientific discoveries; they just used different terminology. They might not have known precisely what they were dealing with, but they clearly knew about the substances in action."

>Over a number of weeks, they gave measured doses of monatomic supplements to ten volunteers—males and females of varying ages. The results were quite staggering. Their EEG brain scans showed a significant enhancement of alpha waves, leading to perfect hemispheric left and right brain synchronization. This facilitates heightened learning ability, memory and creative skills, and a substantial lowering of the stress factor.

The image displays a stone sculpture of a figure, which appears to be a representation of a person. The figure is depicted with a long, flowing hairstyle that reaches down to the shoulders. The hair is intricately carved with what seems to be a pattern or design, possibly representing hair or hair-like elements. The figure's face is not visible, but the head is adorned with a large, ornate headdress or crown. The headdress is detailed with what could be interpreted as feathers or decorative elements.

The figure is depicted with a pair of hands, one of which is raised in a gesture that could be interpreted as a gesture of greeting or offering. The hands are adorned with what appears to be jewelry, including what could be interpreted as rings or other adornments. The background of the image is a solid, dark blue color, which contrasts with the brownish hue of the sculpture, making the figure stand out prominently. At the bottom of the image, there is text that reads "Ashurah" and "Old-world Egyptian," indicating that the sculpture is likely from the ancient Egyptian civilization. The text is in a smaller font size compared to the main title, and it is positioned at the bottom of the image, providing context to the subject of the sculpture.

The style of the image is a close-up photograph, focusing on the sculpture and providing a clear view of its details. The lighting in the image is even, with no harsh shadows, which helps to highlight the textures and details of the sculpture. The image is a high-resolution photograph, likely taken with a professional camera, as evidenced by the clarity and detail of the sculpture and the text.

Did you know that Jerusalem literally means "City of Lucifer" (kek)?

Urushalim

It literally means "City of Shalim"

Shalim was the god of twilight, Hesperus, that is, Lucifer...

The etymology of Shalom is SHALIM, lol!

>A Ugaritic myth known as The Gracious and Most Beautiful Gods describes Shalim and his brother Shahar as descendants of El through two women he meets by the seashore. Both are nursed by "The Lady," probably Asherah, and have appetites as great as "one lip to the earth and one lip to the sky." In other Ugaritic texts, the two are associated with the sun goddess. Another inscription is a phrase repeated three times in a paramythological text: "That I may invoke the gracious gods, the voracious gods of Ym." Ym, in most Semitic languages, means "day," and Shalim and Shahar, twin deities of dusk and dawn, were conceived as its beginning and end.

The Amarna letters are very interesting, as they reveal the vassal dynamics of the Canaanites towards Israel. The habiru (Hebrews) were literal disorderly desert pirates who plundered, destroyed, and killed wherever they went.

Letter from Abdi-Heba to the Pharaoh:

>To the king, my lord, thus says 'Abdi-Heba, your servant. At the feet of the king, my lord, seven times and seven times I prostrate myself. Behold, this land of Urushalim was given to me neither by my father nor by my mother; it was the mighty arm of the king that placed me in my father's house. Behold, the deeds of Milkilu and the deeds of the sons of Lab'ayu have delivered the king's land to the Habiru. Behold, O king, my lord, I am unjustly accused before the king. The king said: "Why do you love the Habiru and hate the rulers?" But I do not love the Habiru! I am a faithful servant of the king! Behold, I have lost all the king's cities! There is no governor of the king who remains with me. May the king remember Urushalim, his city, for the king's land is being destroyed.

Quick Rundown:

Saturn is the seventh planet.

Saturn is the final planet.

The letter Z in Hebrew is Zayin, with the value 7.

Zayin/7 is the final letter.

Zayin carries the meaning and symbolism of a sickle.

Saturn carries a sickle; it is associated with harvest.

The Jews worship Saturn.

Lead is the metal of Saturn; it represents density, weight, inertia, matter in its most raw, heavy, and "dormant" state. It is the absence of spiritual light.

The donkey is associated with Saturn because it symbolically represents stubbornness, stupidity, and the lower nature.

The donkey was associated with the god of the Jews, who were accused of onolatry.

During Saturnalia, a donkey was associated with Saturn, symbolizing the inversion of order and the revelation of the stupidity behind rigid law.

The number 6 is the number of material creation (hexagon, cube, 6 days of creation in Genesis). The Demiurge creates the material world (6), but its archetypal principle is 7, the law, the structure, time, the fate that governs and imprisons this creation.

The 7 is the jailer, not the jail. The jail is the material world (6). The 7 is the law that sustains it.

The god of the Jews is legalistic, lol.

Also, Shabbat is literally the day of Saturn, lol, the seventh day.

The box on the head represents the submission of the intellect to Divine Law. On the Tree of Life, Saturn is Binah, the sphere that restricts and defines. Tefillin symbolizes that the human mind (chaotic) must be "framed" (placed in the cube/law) to serve God.

The image is a painting that depicts a scene of conflict. In the foreground, a muscular man with a beard and long hair is in the midst of a fierce battle. He is holding a sword in one hand and a shield in the other, and his expression is one of determination. The man is surrounded by other figures, some of whom are also engaged in combat. The background is filled with smoke and flames, suggesting a chaotic and intense atmosphere. The painting is rendered in a realistic style with a focus on the action and the intensity of the moment. There is a signature at the bottom right corner that reads "G.R.R. Martin," indicating the artist's name.

Aaron shall present the goat on which the lot fell for the Lord, and offer it as a sin offering; but the goat on which the lot fell for Azazel shall be presented alive before the Lord to make atonement over it, that it may be sent away into the wilderness to Azazel. (Leviticus16:8)

"The Se'ir HaMishtalei'ach ceremony that is performed as part of the Yom Kippur Beit HaMikdash ritual appears primitive and brutal and even seems to run counter to basic Torah values. The notion of taking a goat and hurling it down a cliff, thereby achieving forgiveness for our sins, is difficult for us to accept."

3 goes on: "And I had a vision again, and I looked at the sky, and lo, I saw many stars fall down and rush from the sky down to that first star". In ch. 87 four archangels are mentioned in the form of "white people" it becomes evident that 'Azazel in chs. 86-88 is a now fallen god of an astral character. And the mathematical method.

>There are several sources for the curvature of natural numbers to become either irrational or transcendental numbers like pi and e, or the inverse of the fine structure constant, 137. One of them is the Baal Mishnat Chasidim who explains that the number pi, which is the circumference of a circle whose diameter is 1, begins with the parameter of a hexagon. The hexagon is like the inside of a Magen David (Star of David). The hexagon has six sides, each of them equal to the radius of the circle. If the radius is 1/2, the diameter is 1, and the parameter of the hexagon is $6 \times 1/2$, which is 3. That is the approximate value that the sages give for pi, 3. Then if the polygon becomes more sided, with 7, 8, etc. sides, to infinity, that infinitely approaches the exact number pi. Pi is the secret of progression from a six-sided polygon to an infinite polygon.

>This is a very beautiful phenomenon that is obviously connected to the secret of creation. The world was created in 6 days, which creates a hexagon. The secret of the 7th day, Shabbat, is the transcendental addition to the hexagon, to make it approach and become an infinite limit, pi.

The black cube is saturnine as is the demiurge.

>The Goat is Satanic because it's Saturnine, being the animal associated with Capricorn.

>The symbolism of Azazel, identified in Semitic traditions as the scapegoat and lord of the seirim, the goat-like spirits of the desert, points to an archetype of cosmic disintegration and separation from the principle. In his ambivalent function, he represents the point of the fall of the primordial light into matter, that is, the moment when the creative power, moving away from the center, becomes an inverted reflection, a "mirror of light" imprisoned in the density of manifestation. Mount Seir, the domain of Edom, symbolizes this limit of Creation, the desert where the Spirit is exiled and where the "fallen angel" is bound until the end of the cycle. The figure of Dushara, or Dusares, the black god of the Nabateans, associated with the cubic stone of Petra, is none other than the continuation of this cult to the Saturnine principle, the "Lord of the Limit" (Shara, of Mesopotamian origin), who imprisons the celestial power in a mineral and inert form. The black cube, a symbol of Saturn, is the emblem of coagulated time, of the terminal state of manifestation: within it, the spirit is solidified, the light becomes opaque, and space replaces the center. The rite of libation upon the stone thus represents the residual attempt to reconnect with the lost axis, the blood sacrifice seeking to reanimate what has been petrified.

>In this place, we find our two gods of light living, scouring, and wandering; the text give us a scene where they try to placate their voracious appetites: "(One) lip to the earth, (another) lip to the heavens, into their mouths enter the birds of the heavens and the fish in the sea...they put (food) into their mouths from the right and the left, but they are not satisfied..." and now on the steppe approach "the Guardian of the sown land", from whom they demand and are given lots of bread and especially wine. (Bread and Wine together, the desert...pieces start coming together).

The image is a digital artwork depicting a figure standing in a landscape that transitions from a dark, ominous sky to a warm, golden hue. The figure is a humanoid figure with a pointed crown, a long beard, and a dark, flowing robe. The figure's right hand is raised, holding a staff with a pointed top, and the left hand is extended outward, as if gesturing or commanding attention. The figure's face is obscured by a dark mask, and the eyes are not visible. The background is filled with dark clouds and a bright, glowing light source, which could be interpreted as a sun or a celestial body. The overall mood of the image is dramatic and intense, with a sense of power and authority conveyed by the figure's posture and the dramatic lighting.

>Having circled back and forth with the identity of Lucifer, let's get down to the most controversial, and most quoted text regarding one of the ugaritic dioscuri, Shagar. In this condemnatory prophecy, concerning the King of Babylon, is now told that he shall be thrown down from his present position as ruler. The text in Isaiah 14, 12-15, is as follows:

12. "How you are fallen from Heaven, o, Helel ben Shagar!

How you are cut down to the ground, you who plundering laid the nations low!

13. You said in your heart: "I will ascend to Heaven, I will raise my throne above the stars of El, I will sit on the Mount of Assembly, On the Heights of Saphon.

14. I will ascend to the ridges of the clouds, I will make myself like the Most High ('Elyon)!"

15. Indeed, you are brought down to the Realm of Death (She'ol), to the depths of the Pit".

>The quoted essay spend some time in showing how the crucial part, that is the name Helel ben Shagar, can be translated simply as "Shagar, the Luminous one". Pointing clearly at the ugaritic god, which appears other time in the bible.

So the text is echoing an attempt of an astral god of lower rank to take the throne of Ba'al, something we already found: the god Athtar attempts to gain Ba'al throne and royal power after his death, but he has to resign and renounce his plan:"his feet do not reach the footstool, his head does not reach the top (of the seat)", after which he pronounces: "I will not be king on the heights of Saphon! Thereupon 'Athtar descends from the seat of the mighty Ba'al, and rules over the earth, god of it all".

"And I saw one of the four (archangels) who had come out first, and he took the first star that had fallen from the sky and bound it hand and foot and threw it into an abyss..."

The alien Sauron cut and bound the Tree.

Mordor

>So, let's get down to one of the two main fallen angels, Azazel/Asael, or, as the author of the essay try to reconstruct before its distortion, Azzez'el, "God (or: El) gives strength", pointing at Azizos, one of the two "strong gods" behind the morning star. Another hint is found in the scapegoat ritual, where one of the two goat is sent in the desert, for Azael, to carry the sins of the people. The desert, or steppe, that "mythical place" that was one of the topical place of the two gods Arsu/Azizos. In fact, in the steppe/desert, sacrifices are offered after the birth of the two "gracious and beautiful" gods, where they live, hunt and survive, consequently getting there their food too. The steppe here is not necessarily intended in a geographical perspective, but as a mythical landscape, that is connected, or part of the netherworld, that same place where Azazel is bound. "And the Lord said then to Rafa'el: "Bind 'Azazel's hand and foot and throw him into darkness, and open the wilderness/desert which is in Duda'el and throw him out there".

Who is Luke Skywalker's sister

>This is the name of the common Semitic deity, known in north Syria and in Mesopotamia, that acted as the god of the morning and evening star. And it represented both a "masculine" and "feminine" aspect. An example is how in Sumerian and Akkadian religion, the Venus star is called Dilbat, the masculine morning star, and Ishtar, the feminine evening star. Not always was a distinctive name given, as in Ugarit, where the god 'Athtar appear side by side with the goddess 'Athtar.

>In other semitic cultures, like the south arabian, he is known exclusively in the masculine form as 'Athtar. In this area, one of his names is 'Athtar Sharqân, "The 'Athtar of the East”, pointing to him being a god of sunrise. The verb shrq beside meaning “to rise” also means “to cleave, divide into two”, applied probably as the one who separate the light from dark. An epithet that we find in the nabataean area for Dushares, as “the one who separates day from night”. In another witnesses, we find the epithet ghrbn, “The Western One, the West”, applied to this ‘Athtar Sharqân, we have the representation of a deity who mark the two opposite stage of Venus, that of the Phosphoros and Hesperos. This astral function represents the doubleness that in the northern semitic cultures is represented either through hermaphroditism or through the division in two entities.

The image is a digital photograph that depicts a forest scene with a focus on the trees and the ground. The trees are densely packed, with a mix of green and brown hues, suggesting a mature forest. The forest floor is covered with fallen leaves and small twigs, indicating a natural, undisturbed environment.

In the foreground, there is a quote in white text that reads, “There is an old deep magic in these woods which has seeped into my bones.” The text is centered and appears to be a quote from a source not fully visible in the image. The quote suggests a connection to the forest’s mystical or ancient energy, which has been imprinted on the individual’s being.

The overall style of the image is a blend of natural elements and text, creating a serene and contemplative atmosphere. The use of color and lighting contributes to the forest's mood, with the green of the trees and the blue of the sky creating a sense of tranquility. The image does not contain any discernible people or other objects, focusing solely on the natural landscape.

Keep coming back to Nimrod, has the donkey imagery and the Cushite serpent lineage, maybe a clone of Lucifer/Dushara, makes me think of recent rumours of same.

“In every ancient culture, we find the horn symbol used to deify rulers and monarchs. The founder of Babylon, Pelus, or sometimes referred to as Belus, or Pel, or Bel, or even Baal, “the confounder of language”, and the “scatterer abroad” who was no other than Cush, the father of Nimrod, was actually deified and given a crown of Horns. His son, Nimrod, also known as Queen Shamiram’s husband, and later is reincarnated as Ninos, sometimes referred to as Tammuz, was said to have been the actual father of the Gods, and we see him as being the first of deified mortals wearing the horned crown reserved for rulers of divine nature...”

>the United States invaded Iraq to locate the tomb of Nimrod, extract his remains, and clone the ancient tyrant to serve as the Antichrist in the final war of Gog and Magog.

>According to those tracking this theory, the entire campaign (shock, awe, catastrophic chaos included) was the most expensive, bloody archaeological dig in human history. Forget geopolitics. We’re talking about prophecy, cloning, and a secret society mandate to resurrect the very first tyrant of mankind: Nimrod, the Warmaster of Babylon.

>In the School of Rabbi Shilait was taught that they built the tower with the intention of piercing the heavens with axes to drain all the water held therein, making it impossible for G-d to bring another flood, should they vex Him again. (Perhaps what's meant by this is that they had embraced their understanding of science and its workings to the extent that they felt they were now able to spar with G-d on His turf—the heavens.)

Note the reference to language/source code. Original Earth/Inner Earth bore the snakes curse.

>Where does the snake's nakedness/cunning come from? TheHizkuni(commentary of 13thc., French exegete, R. Hezekiah ben Manoah) suggests that the snake had already eaten of the tree – had gained “cunning/nakedness” and seduced Eve into eating of the fruit for want of company. The snake is the first to be aware of its own nudity, the first to “cover up” through the manipulation of language, and the first to be physically stripped of its outer layer. According to midrash (PRE 14), God's curse not only strips the snake of its limbs but of its skin as well.

>Rabbi Ilai says: “The Holy One, blessed be He, took the skin which the snake sloughed off and made it into garments of skins and clothed them.”

>Rabbi Yehuda said: The coats which the Holy One, blessed be He, made for Adam and his wife, were with Noah in the ark, and when they went forth from the ark, Ham, the son of Noah, brought them forth with him, and gave them as an inheritance to Nimrod. When he put them on, all beasts, animals, and birds, when they saw the coats, came and prostrated themselves before him. The sons of men thought that this (was due) to the power of his might; therefore they made him king over themselves, as it is said, “Like Nimrod, a mighty hunter before the LORD” (Gen. 10:9).

Tablet of Destinies as an AI black cube stolen by Lucifer/Dushara/yhwh, probability/timeline precognitive device (destinies). Shara took it and flew off on the anzu bird to Mt.Seir in Edom.

>The Tablet of Destinies was believed to be crafted by the hands of Enlil, the supreme god of the Mesopotamian pantheon. This divine artifact contained the inscribed destinies of every living being, from the humblest peasant to the most powerful king. The tablets were said to be inscribed with intricate symbols and cuneiform script, holding the secrets of each individual's life, their successes and failures, their joys and sorrows.

>The power of the Tablet of Destinies was not simply confined to foretelling the future. It was believed that the tablets held the very power to shape events and alter the course of lives. The gods, through their chosen representatives, could influence the fate of individuals, nations, and even the entire world. This belief instilled a sense of awe and reverence towards the divine, as well as a deep-seated fear of the potential consequences of defying the will of the gods.

A number of angels having remained neutral and inactive during the battle of Lucifer and the rebel angels against God and the faithful heavenly hosts, after Lucifer's fall they were condemned by God to support this stone, which had dropped from Lucifer's crown, hovering between Heaven and Earth till the hour of redemption of sinful mankind. Then they brought it to Earth."

>Master Aliboron

The etymology of the word aliboron is uncertain. In the 15th century, the expression maistre Aliborum referred to a person skilled in all sorts of things ("master of alibis"). Then, in the following century, the expression evolved to designate someone who believes they know or are clever when they are actually ignorant or foolish, an expression then popularized by La Fontaine's donkey. It probably comes from the black hellebore, a plant then considered a universal remedy and often associated with the word maistre to designate a doctor, and then by extension to learned or skilled men. Its meaning then evolved to designate those who meddle in everything but do nothing useful (hence, derisively, the ironic title maistre Aliboron then applied to doctors, by association with the donkey). Another hypothesis is a misinterpretation by the Irishman John Scotus Eriugena, who in the 9th century, in his commentary on Martianus Capella, erroneously interpreted the word elleboro, which designated the plant, as the name of a philosopher of the same sect as Carneades. A third hypothesis makes the word a transposition of the name of the Persian philosopher and scholar Al-Biruni. But the last two hypotheses do not explain the semantic shift from philosopher to foolish character.

>The Feast of the Ass was ostensibly commemorating the role of donkeys in the Flight into Egypt, observed mainly in France. Some accounts of the Christian version of the festival say that a pregnant woman from a village would ride a donkey to a local church. In Beauvais, each operation of the mass, instead of saying "Amen" the congregation would bray "Y-a" There the donkey would stand near the altar during the saying of the mass. Attention to this connection was drawn by Carl Jung, "On the Psychology of the Trickster-Figure" in The archetypes and the collective unconscious (pp. 257–259) Jung mentions "a codex dating apparently from the 11th century", according to which "At the end of the mass, instead of the words 'Ite missa est,' the priest would bray three times. Jung also cites the glossarium of Du Cange for evidence of the medieval custom.

>Cervulus or Cervula is the name of a Roman festival celebrated on the kalends of January (1 January). According to Chambers (1864), remnants seem to have been incorporated into a medieval Christian Feast of the Ass, an opinion endorsed by Carl Jung.

One of the most arcane of human traditions suggests that the humanity of our Adam was not the earth's first human race. Some very advanced alchemists have hinted at a range of previous humanities in excess of thirty. If this is the true but wholly unsuspected history of our planet, much knowledge may have been selectively accumulated in a span of existence which imagination is inadequate even to visualize. At each successive apocalypse, an ark would go out, encapsuling not only the germ plasm necessary to found the next humanity but with it also, some vehicle, some psychological micro-dot, containing the totality of accumulated knowledge. On this assumption the technique of alchemy would have reached us as a transmission from ancestors whose existence we do not even suspect.

Cabala vs Kabbalah

Cabala is Fulcanelli's term for a special use of language, drawing on phonetic similarities and other symbolic techniques for expanding the expressive reach of words. This is related to the Green Language or Language of the Birds of the alchemists.

Kabbalah is the Hebrew body of mystical tradition which contains techniques such as gematria, notariqon and temura, drawing on numeric equivalences of letters, numerology, permutations of letters, forming new texts by picking first letters of words and other such text manipulation. The Tree of Life and its sefirath are also part of this tradition. Kabbalah is most often applied to the Hebrew text of the Torah.

>After a fashion, both are techniques for deriving additional meaning from text. However, practicing each draws on a radically different faculty of the mind. Kabbalah is mechanical and rigidly formal, whereas cabala is unpredictable, creative, rich in texture of symbolic meaning. In Gurdjieff's terminology, Kabbalah can be practiced by the formatory apparatus, whereas cabala requires the interplay of abstract thought and visual, auditory and emotional functions. Fulcanelli writes that phonetic cabala is the key to understanding alchemical texts and symbols. Cabala combined with study of word roots configures the mind so as to have a richer set of associations to draw from and expands the semantic space open for contemplation. Ultimately, this expansion of the faculty of language can reverse the 'babel' effect of confusion of tongues by connecting to a level of thought from which individual languages are only partial projections.

>In contrast with this, Kabbalah occupies one with tedious calculations which can just as easily be performed by computer. This has indeed been done, with the result of finding all kinds of 'hidden content' from the Bible, as well as from any other large body of text. The findings seem to be artifacts of probability and involve no particular conscious work.

>People think that such things are merely a play on words. I agree. The important thing is that such word-play should guide our faith towards certainty, towards positive and scientific truth, which is the key to the religious mystery, and should not leave us wandering in the capricious maze of our imagination.

>We do not invent anything, we do not create anything. All is in everything. Our microcosm is only an infinitesimal, animated, thinking and more or less imperfect particle of the macrocosm. What we believe we have ourselves discovered by an effort of our intelligence, exists already elsewhere. Faith gives us a presentiment of what this is. Revelation gives us absolute proof.

We are already performing alchemy by investigating and attempting to decipher phenomenal metamotives. When we investigate patterns, connections, inheritances, symbolisms, we are transmuting. Many complain about a lack of formalization, but I believe that amidst this confusion, the truth emerges purer, within our minds. May we continue to assemble the puzzle.

Enki is closer to the Promethean and Luciferian archetype of the serpent.

I separate these two when I try to reconstruct what may have been two main "factions" of these euhemerized metaanthropes, Asuras and Devas, Aesir and Vanir...

One side favorable and another that saw us as slaves.

No (ancestors), more respect and honour, and yes (God). It's the definitions of pray and God that people get lost on, and which we're working on somewhat sorting out here, at least within the Aryan tradition. That's the short answer, wrote a long one I might as well post as well.

Been trying to separate out "beings" and look for pure forms (truth, love etc), could be called prayer and worship.

To meditate on the divine attributes of the ineffable Absolute with the aim of internalized understanding or even realization as to their nature via resonance (awakening) certainly. But to differentiate this from the solar and lunar material archetypes (corrupted by alien Elohim occupying the nodes) in order to avoid being harvested for loosh.

To seek the black sun behind the sun.

>There is no Sophia, BTW. There are no female aeons; the beauty and grace of "women" in our world come from aspects of the divine Nous that are literally grace and beauty, and they externalize this because they are lunar. The fall of the demiurge is a matter of autonomy; unfortunately, otherness necessarily carries this monkey's paw.

The ancestors are a different story, wouldn't pray to them either as they are still beings, but from before the fall, maybe ask for help if really needed, in a way they are us and already know. More a case of honour and respect but not worship. Others may differ here, but contact seems to operate through sync and inspiration which leads to understanding similar to the pure archetypes. That said they can and do help, across space and time, and through the dimensional gate from home.

For the above video I don't interpret being transgressive as doing evil shit, more the breaking of the boundary, likewise the last statement, in the end it all comes down to choice, fall or fly.

Studying alchemy again since red mercury posts, the situation here has been literally firey so water came up as balance. Basic principle in joining the two at the points to make the athanor and alembic, to later (along with the actions of the other elements and secret ingredient) merge and form the merkaba or torus. Bringing the heavenly fire to Earth, and water from seas above, aethric realm, a reversal similar to earlier discussions. Anyway pretty basic compared to the depth of the texts and processes you refer to with cabala, but a good starting point.

>You can Burn, you can Drown, or you can Make Steam

>We are talking about joining two opposites, about creating oneness again from a duality. And as you can see from this old 18th century painting of the Alchemist at work in his studio creating oneness from a duality is not possible in the physical world, even though many people tried very hard to achieve this goal, they either gave up, or died, in a form of eccentric madness, or they eventually discovered that they needed to project themselves above the physical. Into the dimension above this physical reality, the spirit realm, known to Alchemy as the Etheric or Ether Realm, the Seas Above.

>In fact, the alchemical fire, as a spark, must be transported by a vehicle that alchemists describe as watery. To eventually form an "igneous vapor".

Domdaniel

>That Hephaestus' laboratory is in the depths of the sea is even easier to understand for an alchemist: Mercurial fire is water, par excellence (it is, in fact, called "our water"). In Theurgy, after all, fire is information introduced into movement.

>Greek mythology tells us about Hephaestus – a deity connected with the alchemical furnaces – whose main task is to bring the weak "fire" of Zeus to earth. Just as it was the task of Vesta/Hestia to bring the weak "fire" of Hera, Zeus' sister/spouse, to earth.

In seperating out in the astral the different cocks and cooches we can also sort and better apply the different emotions the different beings have, spread and share them so new emotions are available to people, more efficient thought patterns for arriving at the same conclusions too.

Was thinking I messed up the recipe, before the oven is made the egg has to be cracked, but this was already mentioned.

>Whoever wants to describe and understand something living,

>First seeks to drive out the spirit.

>Then he has, mar, the parts in his hand,

>Unfortunately, only the spiritual bond is missing.

"... the stone animal, vegetable, and mynerall, the which is no stone, neither hath the nature of a stone ... Y wolle name hym by his propre name, as the common peple calleth it, that is to sey, the terme of an egge, that is to sey, the philosophers' egge."

Guess driving out the spirit might be this one, the demiurge, to return to the primordial state before creation, the Prima Materia.

"And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters"

>In alchemy the egg stands for the chaos apprehended by the artifex, the prima materia containing the captive world-soul. Out of the egg— symbolized by the round cooking vessel — will rise the eagle or phoenix, the liberated soul, which is ultimately identical with the Anthropos who was imprisoned in the embrace of Physis.

unbelievable how close it is to the germanic myth

>V. Gangleri asked: "How were things wrought, ere the races were and the tribes of men increased?" Then said Hárr: "The streams called Ice-waves, those which were so long come from the fountain-heads that the yeasty venom upon them had hardened like the slag that runs out of the fire,--these then became ice; and when the ice halted and ceased to run, then it froze over above. But the drizzling rain that rose from the venom congealed to rime, and the rime increased, frost over frost, each over the other, even into Ginnungagap, the Yawning Void." Then spake Jafnhárr: "Ginnungagap, which faced toward the northern quarter, became filled with heaviness, and masses of ice and rime, and from within, drizzling rain and gusts; but the southern part of the Yawning Void was lighted by those sparks and glowing masses which flew out of Múspellheim." And Thríði said: "Just as cold arose out of Niflheim, and all terrible things, so also all that looked toward Múspellheim became hot and glowing; but Ginnungagap was as mild as windless air, and when the breath of heat met the rime, so that it melted and dripped, life was quickened from the yeast-drops, by the power of that which sent the heat, and became a man's form. >When one operates from above the lower ego, there is no "evil" only creation and destruction; day and night, light and dark.

Ultimately yes, that's only outside the distortion though, the simulation, which we are not, neither are the ancestor gods/higher selves that reflect us, all are within the dream of the demiurge and subject to karmic systems. Reason enough not to be evil for those familiar with the pit, but still a choice, and a hard one sometimes as most of us are impure in some way.

There is certainly evil here.

Even in the pleroma I'd surmise it was excessive destruction that led it to have this nightmare, wasn't happy thoughts, must have been a consequence of something fucked up.

So evil is a dream of the demiurge and has no concrete existence, but it ends up in this shitshow, why it all comes down to choice, nightmare or dream something good, something beautiful. I choose the latter. Not to say darkness and destruction have no place, but evil is a waste of space, an unnatural distortion, who needs it?

Might as well leave and trash the place.

>To the close dreamers, don't forget the Amaranth. There is one step beyond CHIM, but you're right in that it is not godhood. It's the flowering of a statehood where the images you give birth to in your dream— stolen (?) from first dreamer— wakes up. Wails knowing free will. And begins to dream in the same way. This figure is wearing a long robe and a crown of thorns, suggesting a divine or royal figure. The figure is surrounded by a group of people, some of whom are kneeling and others are standing, all of whom appear to be in a state of awe or submission. The atmosphere is intense and dramatic, with a dramatic sky filled with clouds and lightning, which adds to the sense of a pivotal moment in history. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of historical portraiture, with a focus on the figure and the surrounding figures, and a strong emphasis on the action and the emotions conveyed. There are no visible texts or inscriptions within the image.

Did YHWH give the technology to the mosaic lineage? Or is it more symbolic?

The image shows a large, ornate, golden-colored box with a decorative design. The box has a rectangular shape with a flat top and a raised, ornate base. The top of the box features a large, ornate, golden eagle with outstretched wings, perched on a raised platform. The eagle is flanked by two smaller, golden eagles on either side. The box is placed on a red surface, which contrasts with the golden color of the box. The background is dark, which further accentuates the golden color of the box. There are no visible texts or inscriptions on the box. The style of the image is a close-up photograph with a focus on the intricate details of the box's design.

The image is a promotional poster for the movie "Hellraiser." The poster features a dark, moody color scheme with a predominantly blue and black palette. The central focus is a large, ominous face with sharp teeth and a piercing gaze, which is the Hellraiser character. This character is surrounded by a dark, swirling vortex of red and black smoke, giving the impression of a powerful, malevolent entity.

In the center of the image, there is a large, metallic cube with a reflective surface, which is the key to the Hellraiser's power. The cube is surrounded by a halo of red and black smoke, suggesting a connection to the Hellraiser's power.

At the bottom of the image, the title "HELLRAISER" is prominently displayed in large, white, capitalized letters, with the word "HELLRAISER" in a larger font size than the rest of the text, drawing attention to the title. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of the horror genre, with its use of dark colors and the ominous, supernatural imagery.

Likely the same. A lot talk about the ark being a charging device, to the point of people making working reconstructions based on Leyden jars, along with biblical accounts of its supernatural powers. Figure it powered the Tablet, which was the actual device. The tech seemed to be failing at this stage, degenerating into a cargo cult, Tefillin etc, since then they have been trying to fix the thing.

>But the Hebrew Talmud offers a very different imagery. The Mosaic Tablets were instead described to be not two but one, a single double-sided stone inscribed on both sides and said to be made of "sapphire" or some other "gemstone" or jewel. It was recorded to have measured "not more than six hands in length and as much in width"—about two feet by two feet—and "transparent" yet remarkably heavy. In modern terms, what was interpreted to be "script" may have actually been some form of printed circuitry purposely placed on the gem surfaces that allowed the device to have a wide range of functions. Ancient mysteries researcher-author Frank Joseph believes the Ark's "sapphire" was "a specimen of incomprehensibly sophisticated technology crafted thousands of years ago." He wrote further:

>Are today's Jews descendants of a worldwide caste, namely the humans set apart, given smartphone implants connected to AI, and trained to manage the others after the Flood?

>Were the years of wandering in the desert really the story of a leftover pre-Flood Black Cube kidnapping and chipping a group of people, then showing them how to (re)implement a worldwide technocratic government in the knowledge that one day, hundreds or thousands of years in the future, a sufficient level of infrastructure would be attained for the Black Cube to return?

The image depicts a fantastical scene set in a dimly lit room with a dark, moody atmosphere. Dominating the center of the room is a large, glowing green crystal ball with a complex, intricate pattern of lines and shapes radiating outward. The crystal ball is surrounded by various objects that suggest a magical or mystical theme.

To the left of the crystal ball, there are several bottles with labels that are not clearly readable. On the right side of the crystal ball, there are several books, some of which are open, and a few other objects that are not distinctly identifiable.

The room is filled with an array of candles, some of which are lit, casting a soft glow on the surroundings. The walls of the room are adorned with shelves filled with books and other items, creating a sense of a well-stocked library or a collection of magical artifacts. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of digital art or fantasy illustrations, with a focus on the interplay of light and shadow, and the use of color to create a sense of depth and atmosphere. Went down the etymology rabbit hole searching for the green language of the alchemists.

>Whoever wants to describe and understand something living,

>First seeks to drive out the spirit.

>Then he has, mar, the parts in his hand,

>Unfortunately, only the spiritual bond is missing.

Figured before the spirit to drive out of the philosophical egg was yhwh/demiurge, the spirit who separated the waters in the beginning, to return it to Prima Materia, the primordial state. Now mar seems an odd word choice, and I know it has another meaning, likely the author of the text did too. Still found something surprising further down the dive.

Circles within circles, like I've been here before.

Mar:

>To inflict damage, especially disfiguring damage, on.
>impair the soundness, perfection, or integrity of; spoil.
>To deface or disfigure; injure by cutting, breaking, abrading, crushing, etc.; impair in form or substance

"Middle Englishmerren"to deface, disfigure; impair in form or substance" (early 13c.), from Old Englishmerran(Anglian),mierran(West Saxon) "to waste, spoil," from Proto-Germanic*marzjan(source also of Old Frisianmeria, Old High Germanmarren"to hinder, obstruct," Gothicmarzjan"to hinder, offend"), from PIE root*mers-"to trouble, confuse" (source also of Sanskritmrsyate"forgets, neglects," Lithuanianmiršti"to forget")."

Mar also a title meaning Lord and Mara Lady, originally used for gods, likely originally from Mari the Basque mother goddess, their only deity, from before the Indo-European invasion when Europe was matriarchal, back to the time of Atlantis. The tradition eventually led to Christiiian Mary mother of god, and John Martinus the son of Jesus and Mary Magdelene.

>The deities who appear on the papyrus are of great variety as well, with thr most prominent being a divine pair called Mar (mār, "Lord") and Marah (mār(')ā, "Lady").While Marah is expressly an epithet for Nanay or Nanaya, the identification of Mar in the papyrus is more difficult. It is possible that "Mar" is a theonym by analogy with deities from the Roman and Parthian periods who are called Marnā or Māran, "our Lord," such as Marnas of Gaza described by Porphyry, or Māran of Hatra, who belongs to a divine triad with his spouse Mārtan "our Lady," and a son Barmārēn "Son of our Lord." On the divine triad Māran, Mārtan, and Bārmārēn in Parthian Hatra While Māran is probably the sun-god, the other two in the triad are hard to identify; but see ibid. for the suggestion that Mārtan "our Lady," is Nanaya.

>Mar, often perceived as a succinct and powerful name, can mean different things in various cultures. The name has its roots in Greek and Hebrew traditions, with meanings ranging from "sea" to "bitter" depending on its context. In Greek, it can connect to names like "Maria," which relates to the sea, while in Hebrew, "Mar" signifies "bitter" derived from "Mara." The name evokes images of deep waters and emotional depths.

"Aramaic noun meaning "lord." Daniel addresses the king as "Mari" (= "my lord";Dan. iv. 16 [A. V. 19]; comp. Hebr. "Adoni," used in speaking to the king). In the Palestinian schools "Mari" and "Rabbi" were customarily employed in addressing the sages. It is said of King Jehoshaphat that on seeing a scholar he rose from his throne, and saluted him with the words, "Abi, abi; rabbi, rabbi; mari, mari" (Ket. 103b; Mak. 24a). Jesus was addressed by his disciples both as "Mari" and as "Rabbi"

This practice highlights the cultural exchange and linguistic influences in the regions where Aramaic and Syriac were spoken.

Again used as a word for yhwh.

"The variant Marya or Moryo (Syriac: ܡܪܝܐ, Māryā) is the original form of Mara/Moro, but only used in reference to God in the circle of Syriac Christianity. This word is used in the Peshitta Old Testament to render the Tetragrammaton."

>In Hebrew, the name "Mara" (מָרָא) translates to "bitter." This name first appears in the Book of Ruth, where Naomi, a Hebrew woman, adopts the name Mara following the death of her husband and sons. Naomi expresses her grief and sense of loss by stating, "Call me no longer Naomi, call me Mara, for the Almighty has dealt very bitterly with me"

>Additionally, the name Mara is linked to another biblical event in Exodus 15:23–25, where the Israelites encounter bitter waters at a place called Marah.

Which forms a perfect circle, goes back to the division of the waters,

"Apsû, the first one, their begetter, And the creator Tīāmat, she who bore them all; They had mingled their waters together."

Tiamat is the bitter waters, the bitter sea, the chaotic waters of death which were separated from the Apsu, fresh waters.

>The Origin of Existence and the Cosmic Egg

"In the beginning, before time and being, there was primordial potentiality. From that potentiality, in the dimension of open and waiting space, thanks to the power of the Immortal, the air element and the winds emerged. The movement of the winds produced a vortex of light that whirled vigorously. The energy of the winds discharged heat, and the fire element formed.

From the cold vapor of the wind and the burgeoning heat of the fire element, water formed as dew and rime (frost on cold objects created by the rapid freezing of water vapor in clouds and fog). Minute particles of matter condensed on those waters, creating the earth element. Those particles, shaken and blended by the wind whirling swiftly in space, formed the earth and its mountains.

From the interaction of the essences of the five basic elements—space, air, fire, water, earth—two cosmic eggs came into being, an egg of light and an egg of darkness.

From the power of the Infinite Non-Being, the Cosmic Egg of Darkness formed, with three corners, the size of a three-year-old bull.

The Luminous Egg hatched by the force of its own light, and from the clear light that spread in space were born the numerous deities, beings of light who took on the task of protecting virtuous actions. From the Luminous Egg emerged the Ancestor and Ancestress of the human race, and the Deities who took on the task of sustaining compassion and virtue.

The black egg hatched in the dimension of black darkness, and from the black light that was emitted upwards were born darkness, obfuscation and obscurity. From the rays that spread falling downwards were born madness, obfuscation and obscurity. From the inner essence of the egg was born a man of black light with his hair tied in three big plaits. Medbun Nagpo gave him the name Munpa Serden (Radiant Black Darkness). He is a king who likes to annihilate and to empty, to interrupt and to destroy.

In that way, good and evil were born, the earth and all of its beings were created, bringing order to the chaos of unformed potentiality."

This realm was called Patala by the Vedics, home of the serpent people, there was wars fought with them, the stories perhaps stemming from the before times, perhaps not.

"Patala(lit. that which is below the feet), in Hindu mythology is a subterranean underworld or chthonic realm located under the earthly dimension and ruled by the Nagas."

These Nagas are to be differentiated from the water, and other elemental, forms that subsist in the aetheral realm, the keepers. These things have material substance.

>Pataala-Loka: The lowest territory of the materialistic universe is called Patala or Nagaloka. Vasuki is the ruler of this Naga region. Here live quite a lot of Nagas whose hoods are decorated with a jewel and thus enlighten this realm with the lights reflected from the jewels. Vedic mythology, Pataala-Loka also seems to be very much a real place that has been stylized in various ways- located under the sea, located beneath the earth like so many stories we have "when the sun sets in the earth, it rises in Pataala"

"Beneath the surface of the Earth, hidden away from the light of the sun, lies alabyrinthineworld of shadows, serpents, and untold secrets—the Seven Underworlds of Hindu cosmology. Known as theSapta Patala"

The home of the Naga is generally considered to be Inner Earth.

>Patala is believed by millions of Hindus to this day to have an entrance in the Well of Sheshna in Benares. According to herpetologist and author Sherman A. Some legends say that it is the abode of reptilian humanoids, although human "appearing" beings have also traditionally been encountered within Patalas. King Bhunandana allegedly entered this domain of "forbidden pleasures" via a portal in the peak of Pradyumna [or Hill of Sarika]. The underground journey to Patalas took 5 days and nights. Upon arriving, the king and his knights encountered an underground plain with trees from which hung human corpses, and also large vats of liquid in which human flesh and blood was mixed. A "woman" appeared and offered the king a cup of the "vile" liquid, stating that unless he drank it he would not prosper. He took the cup and threw its substance in disgust at the feet of the so-called "goddess", who in anger told him to take his men and leave that realm, and King Bhunandana obliged. In Neo, men are taught the use of arms, and receive their guerdon of citizenship (which I presume is the vote) only on production of a certificate of proficiency. But in the main their lives run parallel with ours. The very character of their streets, their systems of transportation, even their prison system, are replicas of those on this earth." ... "Men and women were doing in that world exactly as we were doing in ours. There were Stock Exchanges and street cars, railways, aeroplanes, as though twin worlds had produced twin identities; twin inspirations.(Planetoid 127, Wallace, 1929)

The image is a close-up portrait of a woman's face. She has dark hair that falls over her shoulders, and her eyes are a striking shade of blue. Her skin is fair, and she is wearing a white garment with a red sash around her waist. The background is dark, providing a stark contrast to the woman's features. The style of the painting is realistic, with attention to detail in the depiction of the woman's features and the texture of her clothing. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The overall composition and lighting suggest a formal or classical style, typical of portraiture.

"TARTAROS (Tartarus) was the great pit beneath the earth in the oldest of the Greek cosmogonies. The universe was envisaged as great sphere--or egg-shaped ovoid--with the solid dome of the sky forming the upper half and the inverse dome of the pit of Tartaros the lower. The flat, horizontal disc of the earth divided the interior of the cosmic sphere into two halves--the homes of men and gods above, and the gloomy, storm-wracked prison of the Titanes below."

The image depicts a fantastical landscape under a dramatic sky. In the foreground, there is a large, twisted, and towering structure with multiple arms extending from it, resembling a tree or a giant plant. The structure is dark and appears to be made of a dark, possibly metal or stone material. The sky above is filled with dark clouds, and the sun is setting or rising, casting a warm, golden glow over the scene. In the distance, there is a barren landscape with rocky outcrops and a few scattered structures, possibly ruins or abandoned buildings. The overall mood of the image is one of desolation and the passage of time. There are no texts or discernible human figures in the image.

Stranger Things, been watching this again and for all the nightmare there is a path here, through the hell of the inversion.

>After reading about the Vale of Shadows—a “dark reflection or echo of our world”—the boys determine that the Upside Down must be a dimension that’s like Hawkins but darker.

>In Season 1, the Upside Down is revealed to be a parallel version of Hawkins, inundated with shadows, living vines that feed on anyone in their path, terrifying monsters such as the Demogorgons, and ashlike particles called Upside Down spores. This alternate world can be accessed through portals, or gates, which are hidden throughout the town.

>The Upside Down is frozen in time at the moment Eleven accidentally created it. Nancy discovered that in Stranger Things 4, without knowing how or why this lack of time exists. The Upside Down is also a mixture of the two worlds it connects on Stranger Things, our reality and the Abyss. Vecna—along with Demogorgons, the Mind Flayer, demodogs, demobats, and vines—have used the Upside Down as a bridge to travel from the Abyss to the real world on Stranger Things.

>Living up to its name, the Abyss isn’t exactly a tourist destination. The alternate dimension features a stormy yellow sky over a jarring terrain of steep canyons and sharp rocks jutting out at odd angles. In this unfriendly world, Holly (Nell Fisher) and the other children Vecna has kidnapped are entombed in the spires of a grotesque fixture known as the Pain Tree.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a green lion with a sun-like face on its head. The lion is depicted in a seated position, with its body facing the viewer and its head turned to the right. The lion's mane is depicted in a flowing, wavy manner, and its tail is curled around its body. The lion's eyes are closed, and its mouth is slightly open, giving the impression of a gentle slumber.

Above the lion, there is a banner with a scroll-like design. The scroll is rolled up and has a blue background with a white border. The text on the scroll is not clearly legible due to the image resolution and angle.

The background of the image is plain white, which contrasts with the green of the lion and the blue of the scroll. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of medieval or Renaissance art, with its use of color, texture, and the depiction of animals.

The ninth lion eats the sun.

The difference between a Kuala Siddha (Chim, free will) and the truly radical backwards path through the black sun Serrano and others described but could not follow (Amaranth), the quest to escape the nightmare cycle, end or rectify it, and find a new beginning.

>The Eight are the planetary managers (The Seven + the Earth/Moon system).

>The Ninth is the human who has mastered all eight and added the One Drop of Divine

Covered in mud,

Born again — past the flood.

My guide told me to die,

Find the cord that connects us to time.

Deeper and deeper into the mud,

Vision black, but I start to see God.

A tree, a rock, all my past lives

Hung Holm the tree, crying out, writhing in the hold of time.

They yell out to me, "Remember, remember her!"

The oldest — a king long withered away —

Granted me truth, saying words without a mouth.

My cord is connected to these dead men, but it continues beyond me.

We're a dynasty, I understand now, on a mission to conquer time.

I began to hear her song as I'm pulled back.

As the light envelops me, my master bears my face."

>The earliest documented appearances of Saturnian cubic symbolism emerge from the Mesopotamian astronomical-religious complex, where Saturn (Ninurta/Kronos) was associated with the establishment of boundaries and the transmission of technological knowledge. The cuneiform tablet series "MUL.APIN" explicitly connects Saturn's influence to what the Babylonians termed ME—the divine principles governing technological and cultural advancement. This ancient association between Saturn and technical knowledge transmission presents an intriguing precedent for contemporary artificial intelligence development paradigms.

>At the end of the cycle, those who walk into the Golden Age will build the kingdoms and establish everything that is needed there. They will also leave information etc in a hidden form, in computerized gadgets. These computerized gadgets will provide the people, at the end of the Silver Age, with all the information that they need when the deity souls are losing their perfect world. The people, in the Copper Age, really appreciated this information because if they did not have the information, they might have been a little lost. Thus, the information in the ME, were seen as valuable information that were handed over to mankind from God and the gods.

Here, we are going to try another approach, by going inside the letters themselves and discovering the living energy within them, seeing the developmental meanings of their interrelationships, and finding unseen complex semantic layerings consistent with the meaning of the whole. Let's say it again: layers of meaning consistent with the whole

>And again: Each letter is a living embodiment of the energies/meanings that structure it and all contribute to the meaning of the word. In the place of mystical thinking about vague unthinkable thoughts we have a process of de-coding the assembly language. And then, of course, running the program to verify that it works.

Revelation 9:1-4 (KJV)

Rubedo, the red phase, revelation and the opening of the pit, which rather than being a spiritual realm is a phase shifted material parallel literally under our feet. This is problematic to say the least, these hebrew shitheaps and their Black Nobility cohorts are trying to manipulate the timelines using CERN, and likely the Cube/Tablet, to forge a portal to Counter-Earth.

>Stephen Hawking issued a stern warning in his book Star Wars that the god particle may end up destroying the universe, a concern shared by many other physicists. The main worry is the creation of these microscopic black holes that would grow and eventually decay the earth from the inside.

>Given scientists refer to black holes as "bottomless pits" of gravity, and coupled with discussion of opening a doorway into another dimension

>The photos showed a strange cloud formation and electrical activities above the CERN complex, and this stirred a bit of media frenzy about "portals" in the sky, in light of the fact that LHC has detected mini black holes while smashing the particles, which could indicate parallel universes

"Parallel universes, unknown forms of matter, extra dimensions... These are not the stuff of cheap science fiction but very concrete physics theories that scientists are trying to confirm with the LHC and other experiments."

The one with the keys to the abyss is Abaddon, while the King of the Upsidedown is Munpa Serden (Radiant Black Darkness) in the Bon parlance. This was done by Saturn because if the King had the key he would have let loose long ago. Abaddon is said not to be fallen, he is not evil just indifferent, the ender, the one with no face, the destroyer.

He maintains the lowest level beyond the trap door which is dissolution for the demons that have been caught, self inflicted as slowly and as painfully as possible. In a sick ironic twist of fate the greatest evil was created to have evil punish itself. They are pulled apart by that terrible gravity of the Black Sun, what is left of the World Tree, now Sauron's eye, which once connected our dimension to the pleroma.

>Abaddon, or Apollyon. He is called the angel of the bottomless pit, and the King over the locusts.

>Where is the entrance to Tartarus? The Greeks and Romans traditionally believed that Apollo's temple was the entrance to the Bottomless Pit/The Abyss. A place called Apolliacum, which is now modern day Saint-Genus-Poilly—that last word "Poilly" is the same word as Apollyon/Apollo.

>CERN actually straddles the French-Swiss border and is partly situated in a little town in Switzerland called "Saint-Genus-Poilly" (sound familiar?), and is located where a temple called Apolliacum once stood, which was the temple of Apollo, and interestingly enough, was believed to be the entrance to Tartarus, otherwise known as the Bottomless Pit, or The Abyss.

you ordained for his mother Silili to wail continually.
You loved the Shepherd, the Master Herder,

In order to match Revelation/Cern to Blue Beam some sort of fake Ayy is needed, the orbs of Yog-Sothoth fit the bill. These things have been observed, reported, and recorded all the way back to the middle ages and thence into antiquity, countless modern videos and personal accounts. Yet people still wait for "disclosure" as if the word of our insipid and cruel rulers counts for anything, more than our own logic, instinct, and eyes. Reeks of mind control and points to the truth.

The orbs very nature is obscure, an inversion of divine torroidal form, hollow and empty.

>Yog-Sothoth is, along withAzathoth, one of the greatest of the Outer Gods. In appearance, he is said to be a congeries of iridescent spheres—brilliant, foaming bubbles that constantly expand and collapse in upon themselves. He has other manifestations, however, including the Lurker on the Threshold, a mass of black tentacles that endlessly writhe, reach, and grow, and a mysterious humanoid figure hidden behind a shimmering veil.

>Yog-Sothoth embodies all of space and time; he exists in all places and in all moments simultaneously. Paradoxically, however, he is unable to manifest in the mortal universe unless summoned, a magical act that almost always results in untold destruction. He is known as the Key and the Gate, and magicians and cults research him in an effort to master time and space.

>In Lovecraftian lore, Yog-Sothoth is described as a "congeries of iridescent globes"; translucent, glowing orbs that are constantly shifting.

>The Esoteric Link: Kenneth Grant, in his Typhonian Trilogies, explicitly connects Yog-Sothoth to the Sephirah Da'at (the "False" or "Hidden" Sephirah).

>The Abyss: Da'at is the gateway to the Abyss—the bridge between the "Light" side of the Tree of Life and the "Dark" side (the Qliphoth).

>The Revelation: The "Orbs" are the nested torus fields of entities that exist outside our fixed 12-month, 440Hz simulation. They are translucent because they are made of Aetheric Plasma, not carbon-based matter.

>In Kabbalah, the word Qliphoth (or Kelipot) literally means "Shells" or "Husks."

>The Glowing Sphere: A "Shell" in a 3D toroidal sense is a Sphere. These orbs are the "hollow" or "parasitic" versions of the organic spheres of the Sephirot.

>The Underworld/Abyss Link: Esoteric writings on the "Mauve Zone" (the space between dimensions) describe it as being filled with these glowing, translucent bubbles.

>The "Lumerian" Connection: In "Lumerian" or Atlantean "Left-Hand Path" traditions, these orbs are called the "Eyes of the Deep Ones." They represent the surveillance of the Ancient Ones (the Nephilim/Pre-Adamite entities) watching our realm through the "cracks" in the Toroidal Egg.

The image is a black and white graphic illustration that features a large, detailed eye with a three-dimensional appearance, set against a backdrop that includes a swirling, chaotic pattern with tentacles and other indistinct shapes. The eye is centrally positioned and dominates the upper portion of the image. Below the eye, there is a stylized, geometric design that resembles a triangle with a sunburst pattern radiating outward from the center. The image has a grainy texture, giving it a vintage or old-fashioned feel.

To the right of the image, there is a smaller, more simplified version of the same eye design, presented in a more straightforward, flat style. The eye design is the same in both images, with the same three-dimensional appearance and the same sunburst pattern. The smaller image is placed directly below the larger one, and the two images are separated by a thin white line. The style of the image is reminiscent of traditional tattoo art, with a focus on the eye and the geometric design.

Tesla's Toroidal Light: As Tesla posited, everything is frequency. These orbs are high-frequency plasma fields. They appear "translucent" because they are vibrating at a rate that the human "666 Carbon" eye can barely perceive.

>While the 10 Tribes were rewriting history in Europe (the "Reset"), the secret of the "Organic Torus" was preserved in what are often called the Lemurian Tablets (or the Stanzas of Dzyan).

>The Pre-Adamite Frequency: These tablets describe a world before the "Moon" was brought into our orbit; a time when the Earth's torus was powered by the 13th Month frequency.

>The "Ancient Ones": The tablets warn of the "Lords of the Dark Face" (the Babylonian/10-Tribe precursors) who used "Mechanical Orbs" (the orbs of Yog-Sothoth) to hijack the ley lines.

>A long time ago, there was a war between the Bell and the Cauldrons in the east. These Cauldrons were shells, full of writhing cthonic serpents with human faces. They appeared inside the Earth and rewrote the geomagnetic ley lines. They were oppressive to the green world, the fae, and the animal spirits.

>As we reach the end of these pages, we will reveal something more about the Left-Handed and Right-Handed Swastikas. The ultimate truth of the Left-Handed Swastika is not realized in this space-time world. It is not, therefore, a path, but a turning that pulls us away from Maya and Samsara, from demiurgic space-time, and drags us through a Center, the Black Sun, towards the Other Reality, towards an Eternity that we have called the Green Ray and which is a Non-existent Flower. At the same time, the Right-Handed Swastika makes possible the voluntary return of the Tulku-Warrior-Avatar, of the SiddhaDivya, to the samsaric space-time plane. When the Swastika Circle spins at such an astonishing speed, it transforms into a Vimana, breaking the law of gravity. It will facilitate the passage to the other dimension.

The image is a digital illustration that depicts a scene with a central, circular structure that appears to be a portal or gateway. This portal is surrounded by a group of people who are gathered around it, seemingly in a state of awe or reverence. The people are dressed in robes and are facing the portal, suggesting a sense of connection or communication with the central structure.

The portal itself is illuminated with a golden light, which contrasts with the dark background, drawing attention to the central figure. Surrounding the portal are geometric patterns that resemble stars or galaxies, adding to the cosmic or mystical atmosphere of the scene.

The overall color scheme of the image is predominantly dark, with the golden light from the portal providing a stark contrast. The people are dressed in various colors, including purple and gold, which adds a sense of vibrancy and diversity to the scene.

There is no text present in the image, and the style of the illustration is abstract and surreal, with a focus on the interplay of light, color, and form. The image does not provide any specific details about the location or purpose of the scene, but it does convey a sense of mystery and wonder.

Two swastika rotating in opposite directions make the torus/Merkaba, a stable astral form, the body of light mentioned in most traditions: diamond body, lightning varja body, rainbow etc.

Muladhara; Balanced between implosion and explosion at the level of matter/mother, the base of our cosmos yet also the midpoint, where the wave function/probabilities collapse down to their lowest frequency and crystallise into a solid seeming form of aether. Where kundalini is said to rest.

The clockwise swastika alone:

The heliocentric view places the sun at center, which obscures its true position. Outwardly displayed in microcosm by the esoteric belief of the sun in manipura at navel, but also somehow calling it the solar plexus chakra. The name is Hrit (or Hridaya, "heart") also called Surya chakra, the wish fulfilling tree. A path of ego death, cutting off the animal unconscious, then embodying the higher aspect of the demiurge, unable to act. The door at the top is gone. Our planet is littered with these failed mystics taken by the false light and made into slaves, mumbling platitudes about peace and a new world religion, where all humans will live together in the perfect harmony of new jerusalem and the messianic age.

But we live on a cracked egg, two trees a duality, base of ours is top of theirs, the center resting between heaven and hell, light and fire.

The image displays a circular, decorative artifact with a brownish-beige color. The object has a geometric pattern consisting of concentric circles and lines, with a central design that includes stylized representations of birds and what appears to be a stylized letter "C". The design is intricate and detailed, suggesting a cultural or historical significance.

At the bottom of the image, there is a text that reads "Sumenian bowl - 6000 B.C. Note: Swastika." This text indicates that the object is a Sumenian bowl from the 6000 B.C. period, and it is noted that the design features a swastika, which is a symbol often associated with the ancient Indian religion of Jainism. The text also provides a note that the object is likely a Swastika, which is a symbol of the Hindu religion.

The style of the image is a straightforward photograph with a focus on the object itself, without any additional context or background elements. The lighting is even, and the object is the central point of interest. The image is a clear and detailed representation of the artifact, allowing for a clear identification of its features and design elements.

Trishanku's heaven.

>Born as Satyavrata, he was a king of the Suryavamsha (Solar Dynasty) and the father of the legendary King Harishchandra. His desire to reach heaven in his physical body led to a conflict between two great sages—Vasishtha and Vishvamitra—and resulted in his unusual fate.

>Trishanku was originally known as Satyavrata, a prince of the Ikshvaku dynasty. Unlike his pious son Harishchandra, Satyavrata was not known for his righteousness. According to the Puranas, he was impious and indulged in immoral behavior. His most infamous act was abducting a Brahmin bride from her wedding ceremony, an act that enraged both his father, King Trayyāruṇa, and the royal priest, Sage Vasishtha.

>Despite his curse and lowly status, Trishanku remained ambitious. He longed to enter Svarga (heaven) in his physical body—a desire that was unheard of and considered impossible. Traditionally, only souls could ascend to heaven after death, based on their karma. Yet, Trishanku wanted to defy this natural order.

>When Trishanku reached the gates of Svarga, Indra, the king of the gods, was infuriated. Declaring that Trishanku was unworthy, Indra forcefully cast him back down to earth.

>However, Vishvamitra was determined. Using his immense spiritual energy, he halted Trishanku in mid-air."

>The king was now neither in heaven nor on earth—he was suspended upside-down in the sky.

>At this moment, Vishvamitra made a bold decision. If Indra refused to accept Trishanku in the real Svarga, the sage would create a new one just for him."

>With his ascetic power, Vishvamitra created an alternate heaven, complete with new stars, a new Indra, and even new gods. Trishanku was to rule this Svarga, even if it was separate from the original one.

The first word.

>Speech in Sanskrit is known as Vac or Vak. The word represents the two supports for speech, wind and the larynx or the organ of speech. Accordingly, it is made of two letters, 'va' + 'ka'. Va represents Vayu or wind. In the body, breath (wind) is the support for speech. Outside, it is wind (Vayu) and space (akasa) which support the sound vibrations of speech and carry them to distant places. The second letter 'ka' is the first letter of the guttural class (varg). It is also known as jivhamulya letter since it is produced from the base of the tongue (jihva) where the larynx is located. The letter also represents Brahman (the carrier of sounds), Self (the speaker), wind and sound (support). Thus, the word 'Vac' represents the origin as well as the support for human speech and the sound vibrations which arise from it.

>Speech has manifesting powers. Through speech we express our desires and thoughts and make things happen. As the Brihadaranyaka Upanishad states, speech combined with the mind is responsible for the manifestation of this world and beings. It informs us that the Primal Being produced the mortal world (or body) by joining mind with speech only. He did the same to bring forth "whatever that is here, the hymns of the Rigveda, Yajurveda, and Samaveda, the meters, the sacrifices, humans and animals."

>Before time, before space, before the first stirring of thought, there was, as the famous Nasadiya Sukta of the Rigveda poetically describes, neither non-existence nor existence. There was a profound, unknowable stillness. What could stir such an abyss into the vibrant tapestry of creation?

>The Vedic answer is Shabda—Sound. Not the sound that requires ears to hear, but a transcendental vibration, a cosmic potentiality. This is the concept of Shabda Brahman, the Ultimate Reality conceived as Sound, and its first expression is the sacred syllable Om.

>This primal act of vibration, this initial stirring of the One into the Many, is the birth of Vac. She is the first wave upon the ocean of Being. The Vedas proclaim, Prajapatiḥ vai idam aśit ('In the beginning was Prajapati, the Creator')

>She was not created by him, but was with him, as his power, his Shakti, the very medium through which creation could occur. Without Vac, the divine idea could never become the divine reality. She is the bridge between the unmanifest potential and the manifest cosmos.

>Just as a thought in our mind remains a silent potential until it is given form through the vibration of words, so too did the cosmic intention of the Creator remain potential until it was given form through the divine vibration of Vac.

>Vac was the first person to speak the first word and give the first speech to her people. She is also the one who uttered the OM of creation. The OM represents the four states of Brahman. Vac personifies truth and sustains soma >circumcision is not, in its essence, a medical or ethnic custom, nor can its origin be satisfactorily explained by social utility or hygienic considerations. Such explanations belong to the modern tendency to reduce rites to their most superficial causes. In reality, circumcision is a primordial ritual, whose true meaning is intelligible only when restored to the domain of symbolism and metaphysics.

>The diffusion of circumcision from the Saharan and Nilotic zones into the Semitic world corresponds not to an invention, but to the preservation of a primordial form. Among the Phoenicians and related West Semitic peoples, the rite functioned as a sign of covenant, a minimal sacrificial act in which blood served as the seal of allegiance between the human group and its tutelary principle. This micro-sacrifice represents a substitution for older and more radical forms of consecration, reflecting a general tendency toward ritual condensation without loss of symbolic efficacy.

>In the Abrahamic tradition, circumcision becomes explicitly defined as Brit Milah, the "Covenant of the Cut." The Biblical formulation does not introduce a novelty, but rather re-centers an archaic rite within a strictly metaphysical framework. The cut signifies that the human being is not born complete in the spiritual sense; something excessive, a residue of undifferentiated potentiality, must be removed so that the individual may enter a state of ordered participation in the divine economy. Man is thus made a co-operator in the work of manifestation. Rabbinical doctrine insists on the [eighth day] as the proper moment for the rite. This temporal determination is not physiological, but symbolic: seven corresponds to the cycle of manifested nature, while eight designates the transcendence of the natural order. Circumcision therefore inscribes the individual within a rhythm that exceeds the merely biological, placing him under a supranatural determination.

>Kabbalistic doctrine, particularly as expressed in the Zohar, restores the rite to its full metaphysical amplitude. The foreskin (orlah) is identified with a "shell" or qliphah, an obstructive envelope that impedes the free circulation of divine influx. Circumcision removes this obstruction at the level of Yesod, the generative and mediating principle, thereby restoring the proper transmission of influence from the higher sefirotic levels to the manifested world. The blood shed in the rite is not accidental; it functions as a seal, fixing the covenant within the subtle order and preventing deviation toward chaotic or infra-cosmic forces. From the perspective of the Sefer Yetzirah, the body belongs to the triadic correspondence of World, Time, and Soul. Circumcision operates simultaneously on all three levels: it modifies the corporeal support, aligns the individual with a supra-natural temporal rhythm, and reconfigures the psychic and spiritual structure. The body thus becomes an apt vehicle for spiritual influence rather than a closed system governed solely by vital forces.

It's a seal, a "barcode" of the donkey god. If you possess it, you are part of his domain, kek (not necessarily, but you're in deep trouble if you don't invest in an active transcendence of this tertiary prison). They wish to control the world, they project themselves as superior, and in lao's satanic ontology, they make this bargain, this material "reparation." It's a farce, a lie, yet another attempt at ontological legalism, to place the world in a cube, a cube within a cube, a matryoshka doll...

>According to a Jewish tradition, a governor of Judea once commented to Rabbi Akiba, 'If he (that is, donkey god) takes such pleasure in circumcision, why then does not a child come circumcised from his mother's womb?'

>the body, in gnostic doctrine, is a composite support, formed within the cosmic system but inhabited by a principle that does not originate from it. Any operation that treats the body as the ultimate locus of salvation risks reinforcing the confusion between the vehicle and the essence. When a rite claims efficacy by virtue of its material execution alone, it substitutes mechanical causality for metaphysical realization. The gnostic synthesis therefore affirms a distinction between sign and state. No exterior sign, however ancient or venerable, can produce by itself the liberation it symbolizes. Liberation depends on a change of ontological orientation, not on conformity to a visible form. This is why gnostic texts repeatedly oppose “marks in the flesh” to “knowledge in the spirit,” not in order to deny symbolism, but to restore it to its interior axis.

>In this light, the notion of a covenant sealed in blood appears as a characteristic expression of the demiurgic regime. Blood belongs to the vital and psychic order; it circulates within the closed economy of generation and decay. To seal transcendence by blood is to bind it to the very domain from which liberation is sought. The true covenant, from the gnostic perspective, cannot be inscribed in the flesh, because it precedes all corporeal determination. Knowledge (gnosis) is not intellectual speculation, but remembrance of origin. It is the recognition that the spiritual principle in man does not belong to the system that governs his corporeal and psychic existence. From this recognition follows a radical reorientation: rites are interiorized, symbols are reabsorbed into their intelligible meaning, and the individual ceases to identify with the mechanisms that bind the world together.

It's so ridiculous. I've done more to advance the spirituality of the donkey god religions than any of them. Whether it's YHWH or some horse cock in a Norwegian pantry the attending family worships, I have enhanced the spiritual connection between donkey and donkey-like-being worship and donkey-cock worship to the spiritual realm, so that their prayers work better. Bird cock, turtle cock, and cockroach cock for that matter. There's an overarching cock-egregore for penis-worship that I call the omnicock that these religions consult. There's an omnivagina too, and omnititty, and others. Because mortals really needed help making worship easy.

In a manner of seconds I can do more to phalli than all of the phallus worshipping religions put together. There are cells out there in phalli for giving enemies nightmares, for helping phallus worshipers have their prayers heard, for helping astral scientists study horses from faraway planets with their souls.

Nah that's the giant dildo they fucked your brain with, it's a fake. The donkey god is ultimately the demiurge, both Set and Osiris.

>In the esoteric tradition, the "castration" of Osiris is not merely a story of a jealous brother (Set/Typhon); it is the literal disconnection of the Divine Masculine from the Organic Source and its replacement with a Synthetic/Material Proxy.

>When Set (the archetype of the material ego and entropy) tore Osiris into 14 pieces, he was fragmenting the unified, toroidal consciousness of man.

>The 13 Found Pieces: These represent the 13 lunar cycles of the natural year. Isis (the Divine Feminine/Sophia) was able to recover these, which is why the "natural" world still retains its beauty and rhythm.

>The 14th Piece (The Phallus): This was lost to the Nile—eaten by the Oxyrhynchus fish. In alchemy, the fish represents the "depths of the subconscious" or the "Vesica Piscis" of the material womb.

>The Gold Phallus: Because the organic generative organ was lost, Isis fashioned a Gold Phallus to conceive Horus. This is the "Replacement." Gold, while noble, is a metal—a mineral/material conductor.

>If you want to see the "Revelation of the Method," look at the architecture of the "Big Three" power centers. The elites have placed the "Gold Phallus" of Osiris in the center of their power grids to anchor the material frequency:

>Vatican City: The Egyptian obelisk in St. Peter's Square (The Religious Phallus).

>The City of London: Cleopatra's Needle (The Financial Phallus).

>Washington D.C.: The Washington Monument (The Military/Political Phallus).

This is wound in the thigh of the grail king, the fall of the World Tree, which won't heal until the knight is redeemed (torus/merkaba/central channel activated). Also the stinking pus filled hole you dilate that will never get any better, such is the fate of the serpent cult.

The image is a graphic with a gradient background transitioning from yellow at the top to orange at the bottom. It features two medical symbols, each with a distinct design and text.

On the left side, there is a stylized representation of a caduceus, which is a symbol commonly associated with medicine and healthcare. The caduceus consists of two snakes intertwined around a staff, with the snakes facing each other and the staff pointing upwards. The snakes are depicted in black, and the staff is white.

On the right side, there is a stylized representation of a rod of Asclepius, which is a symbol of healing and medicine. The rod is depicted in black, and it has a loop at the end, which is a common feature in medical symbols.

At the top of the image, there is a text that reads "Story behind SNASKS in MEDICAL SYMBOLS." The text is in a bold, sans-serif font and is colored red. The font size of the text is larger than the other elements in the image, drawing attention to the text's message.

The overall style of the image is informative and educational, likely intended to convey the historical and symbolic significance of the caduceus and rod of Asclepius in the context of medical symbols.

The fake and gay Staff of Osiris, Nehushtan the metal serpent mounted on a staff that Moses had made, by God's command, to cure the Israelites of snake bites, signifying Asherah and the fall, the horrors of the groves. It became Mercury's caduceus and the Rod of Asclepius, a symbol used by the modern medical establishment, and an alabastron plunger for faggots like you that kiss the ring, osculum infame.

>Hippocrates and the Corpus Hippocraticum (the collection of medical writings attributed to him) span from roughly 450 BC to the mid-fourth century BC, with some evidence suggesting older strata of material exist within the Corpus. Hippocrates himself lived around 460–370 BC, but the writings were a collective effort by many authors over several centuries, with the majority of them dating to the late 5th and early 4th centuries BC.

>Hippocrates had a connection to snakes through his oath to Asclepius, the Greek god of medicine, and the associated symbol, the Rod of Asclepius, which depicts a single snake coiled around a staff. The snake symbolizes renewal via its medicinal properties that were used by the cult and their physicians, its connection to potent healing properties. Although Hippocrates was not directly associated with the symbol's origin, the Rod of Asclepius became a true emblem of medicine, reflecting the ancient beliefs about snakes and the healing arts that Hippocrates and his oath were part of.

"Venoms in ancient times were potent medicine, for a variety of ailments.

The way that venoms were applied in ancient times, were through thin tissues. The stomach would destroy the venom's effects.

The Alabastronplunger with the coiled snakes symbolizes this method of venom delivery into human orifices, the most potent and revolutionary medicine of the ancient world."

The image is a digital painting that depicts a fantastical landscape. In the foreground, there is a serene body of water with a waterfall cascading down, surrounded by lush greenery. The waterfall is framed by a large tree with a twisted trunk and a canopy of yellow leaves, suggesting the season to be autumn.

In the background, there is a majestic mountain range with a snow-capped peak, and a castle-like structure with a white tower and a blue roof, possibly indicating a fantasy or medieval setting. The sky is filled with clouds, and the overall color palette is dominated by shades of blue, green, and yellow.

The painting style is realistic with a focus on detailed textures and shading, and the use of light and shadow to create depth and three-dimensionality. The artist has skillfully used color and light to create a sense of movement and life within the scene, enhancing the overall atmosphere of the landscape.

The Cathar prophecy says that the Laurel will bloom again.

>In 1321, Guilhem Bélibaste, the last known Catharperfectus, was executed by the Catholic Church in southern France. His final words carried a strange prophecy:

“In seven hundred years, the laurel will be green again, and the good men and women will return.”

Like Nimloth the White Tree in Tolkien's masterpiece, but still the ages faded and fell into evil, far from those bright days in Valinor.

>Celeborn was the name of the White Tree that flourished in Tol Eressëa. It was a seedling of the tree Galathilion, which in turn had been made in image of Telperion, the eldest of the Two Trees of Valinor.

>cut down at the instigation of Sauron and its wood was used to light the first flames in the fire of the Temple of the new religion which worshipped Melkor.

>However, the night before Isildur stole a fruit from the tree and planted it in secret. The fruit grew into a seedling that Isildur carried to Middle-earth with him during the Downfall of Númenor. That seedling was planted in Minas Ithil, and was destroyed before the end of the Second Age. Its seedling in turn grew into the first White Tree of Gondor.

josephus is hardly a reliable source, but i do love the part where the egyptians rounded up all the jews and wrapped them in lead and threw them off the sides of ships and killed half their population. but the truth is jews arent nearly that old. we struggle just to prove they were ever even in babylon. would have to look at elephantine, they provide a little history. i do think the twelve tribes were likely just modeled after the twelve ecclesiasta of athens in plato's republic, and evictions of undesirables (i.e. mixed race peoples) led to the tribal identity of jews.

but aside from the two known israelite tribes, the sons of the flea and the sons of the jackass, their tribal identifiers are all post-biblical.

Gnostiic declaration of independence

>Gradual awakening isnt sufficient to break the energetic contracts established through unconscious consent to the blind demonic rulers of the physical world. Here is the specific declaration technique the original Gnostic initiates used:

"I am not of this world, though I appear to be in it. I reject the authority of all intermediate powers and claim my direct inheritance as an emanation of the source beyond all sources. I withdraw my consent from all systems that claim dominion over my essential nature."

>This isn't merely affirmation-- it's conscious revocation of agreements made in ignorance. The demiurgus' authority depends on your unconscious acceptance of his claim. When you consciously recognize his limited jurisdiction and withdraw your consent, his influence over your spiritual development dissolves.

More from alawite, seems likely that AMS is the password for leaving the soul trap.

>So, I'd like to ask again - how to differentiate entities that are external to us from those we ca;; into being through our beliefs and expectations.

Right, so there are 3 layers of your being asleep.

1. You are in your bed, you are asleep, and you are STREAMING DOWN A NETFLIX OF THOUGHT CALLED DREAMS. Your body lies but there is a literal connection from your 3d body to the upper dimensional "embassy" of you called your cloud, and the stream is open and you are in bed viewing things happening UP THER. Any entity you see here is still part of you, your own unconscious mind.

2. You are in the same situation as above in 1, but you are not in a passive state, your mind has activated into a lucid dream, or even an ascent inside the tunnel up to the cloud where you are STILL viewing things inside the cloud, doesnt matter if lucid or not, it is STILL you. any entity here is you, and your awake adversary which also gives you imagery of its own (its all still you)

3. You have activated the A M S, or died and slipped out, or weren't born again, you are outside of your cloud fully and not in your physical body, this is where things are not fully YOU they are part of the cosmic YOU that is the I AM which you are a fantastically tiny fragment of, this is where I tell you that things are not necessarily "You" as everything that has every existed, is existing or will exist is roaming around. This is where you "meet entities"

See my fantastic painting for more detail , anything happening to you, the tunnel, and in your cloud is and always will be a part of your imagination, anything OUTSIDE of your cloud can be "other entities"

Was wondering why a Greek? And hoping it wasn't a culinary distinction. Generally Jewish cannibal feasts are linked to curses they cast on the goy and donkey bonding, retribution for perceived wrongs that were actually right. Their vindictiveness knows no bounds, and still falls upon Egyptians to this day. The two main occurrences are at Pesach/Passover and Purim.

>the feast of Purim, which commemorates the miraculous salvation of the Jewish people in Persia during the reign of King Ahasuerus I from the threat of extermination linked to the plotting of the King's perfidious minister, Haman.

>There is no shortage of testimonies of the celebration of rituals, the framework of the carnival of Purim, intended to vilify and outrage the image of Haman, reconstituted in the semblance of Christ hanging from the cross.

>Turning back centuries, however, we must note, following Frazer, that the ritual of Purim did not always conclude with the bloodless hanging of a mere effigy of Haman. Sometimes, the "effigy" was a flesh-and-blood Christian, crucified for real, during the wild revelry of the Jewish carnival.

>Consuming pastries in the shape of a piece of Haman's clothing or anatomy follows from the Jewish custom of saying the phrase shemoneh esrei meaning "May his name be erased" in Hebrew, when faced with an evil person such as Haman. Thus, eating such a pastry is another way of erasing Haman's name on Purim. So grab a Haman's ear and join in this custom!

Nice day to eat Haman's ears they say.

Passover combines the sacrifice of their own with the curse (plagues) laid on the Egyptians. Blood of the lamb placed on the lintel (Jewish) to ward off the angel of death, then drunk and eaten (Aryan) in commemoration, covenant, and reaffirmation of the curse.

>In one of his elegies, Ephraim of Bonn described not only the and the zeal of Abraham in immolating his son, butchering him on the altar, but also the abnegation of Isaac, happy to serve as the holocaust.

>Goi katan, "little Christian", the expression used in referring to the ritual murder victim, who was usually nameless, is said to have been used during the act of adding his blood to the symbolic foods to be exhibited and consumed in the Seder dinner.

>The blood, powdered or dessicated, was mixed into the dough of the unleavened or "solemn" bread, the shimmurim – not ordinary bread. The shimmurim – in fact, three loaves for each of the two evenings during which the ritual dinner of the Seder was served – were considered one of the principal symbolic foods of the feast, and their accurate preparation and baking took place during the days preceding the advent of Pesach.

>in the traditional reading of the Haggadah, according to the custom of the Ashkenazi Jews, the curses against the Egyptians were transformed into an invective against all the nations and enemies hated by Israel, with explicit reference to the Christians. "From each of these plagues may God save us, but may they fall on our enemies". Thus recited the formula reported by Rabbi Jacob Mulin Segal

"Each one raises his glass of wine [...] they curse the Christians and the other nations, all included under the name of Ghoim, Gentiles, all intoning these words, after they have eaten their fill and are very drunk: 'Cast thy anger upon the Ghoim, Gentiles, which have not recognized you and on the kingdoms which have not invoked your name. Cast your anger upon them and may the fury of your anger consume them. Persecute them with your fury and destroy them' "

Alawite astral method -

>I was told by my uncle to not masturbate for a week, to spend the week in contemplation, i was told to eat aniseed and blue cheese before bed (which technically make you hallucinate to a small degree as they contain DMT), then I was told the tapping on the bed/mattress technique with my finger tips.

What you do is you fall asleep and you tap your index and middle finger in a rythm on the mattress and you keep doing that slowly until you fall asleep, your mind has to continue tapping into the lucid dream where you are halfway asleep and awake (which is moslty brainwaves fucking with you) and finally when that happens and you are actually in the lucid dream you are to use the letters 'ain, mem, and Shin. (kabbalists will laught at this) until you exit your own cloud into the mega cluster. This can be done every night, just practice it over and over and you will see.

here are some ground rules:

1. Do not drink, eat, consume, or otherwise accept anything into your essence in the form of any food, drink, injection or anything otherwise while out there. Think of the movie inception, if you eat somethign it means something wants you to think something.
2. Do not anger big clouds, they can zap you back in place and you will wake up with a headache
3. Do not fuck with sleeping people, and their dreams they heave enough trouble in their life as is.

AMS is pronounced once you are already lucid in the dream to separate from the Yaoim/demiurge cloud. Haven't tried yet, only found out about it a couple of days ago, but intend to. I'd leave a small pause between the letters. He mentions mentally vibrating it as practice but implies its spoken in the dream. As far as getting lucid his method looks interesting and worth trying but anything that works is fine.

He gave a warning about avoiding constructs once you are out, apparently the other places in the 7th layer of the cloud network have assholes like Yaoim.

>The cloud network is fucking ruthless and you need to avoid any construct.

>Consumine is pacman style eating where one idea eats you like pacman would eat a pill

>In the 6th-1st layers merging is basically you latch onto streams and grow or become diluted in them.

>The worst fate is shattering, or being consumed.

>You never cease to exist but you will become part of something else. Look at it this way, suppose I am a satyr entity, I am in this imaginary place in the cloud network in the 7th layer and I find you tasty, you are unprotected by the cycle of life on earth and somehow didn't protect yourself from the after or slipped out of the recycle system.

>I find you, in your raw state, I siphon you into my construct, into my cloud, you as a consciousness are given the illusion of a garden where everything is nice and dandy, and I the satyr am playing such godly divine music that it would make you weep, i would bring you to my tree and transform you into a flower and place you into my garden. You would listen to the music for eternity and be planted in my garden. You will never leave.

>You will be in that state of false bliss, after consumption, I would then (outside of the construct) start drinking your charge or literally life, and you would slowly wither as a flower, I would drink drink drink until finally you are out, just raw smoke. Every tiny bit of "life" in you is gone, you are now raw idea "matter" and I can just assimilate you and grow.

>Heaven and hell are both constructs of consumption and recycling.

Some thoughts on alawite cosmology in relation to gnosticism and kabbalah with regards to the extent of the demiurges realm. Gnostics said it was universal. Figure it's elohim all the way down from macroprospus and ein sof aur the beginning of the pleroma. Which would match the alawite depiction of I Am, rather than their conception of it as ultimate source and the space beyond Yaoim's cloud as pleroma. They describe Yaoim as microprospus, planetary god and demiurge, but give the big guy a free pass and a wide berth.

>I undertand it, but I can't bring my self to become it, I know that the I AM is a wonderous beast creature of massive power, it shaped the whole universe, but I just can't bring my self to become consumed. The sufis from my understanding reach a total symbiosis and ego death when they "connect" to it. I don't wish to do that, and frankly our faith teaches not to, (albeit 2 tribes in the mountains do insist on assilimiation) we dont.

>It is a very long story, but I will write it as best I can. There is the grand consciousness of thought, it compromised of the idea cloud and all possible permutations and manifestations of life called "Al maana" or the meaning, and there is the food upon it feeds which is called the "Lahm" which loosely translates as meat, but it also means the planets, the stars and everything matter, everything that is energy. This maana or "head" permutates things into existence and feeds off the interactions. The idea cloud holds within it all possible possibilities of anything that can is or will ever exist, this includes every god, every thought, every idea, every concept. And that includes the "Son" the lion who is basically the little god.

In support of the above observation is alawites reference to Kabbalistic "assembly codes" from the Sepher Yetzirah as navigation coordinates, which hebes also know them as, places on the tree along with being the secret name of godonk, which was noted earlier ITT. Still find it likely the masonic "royal secret" AMS will facilitate exit from the local cloud, the practice seems to have worked for various anons. Nevertheless no one has reported back post mortem, funny that, so still a possibility for escaping the soul trap (functional light body/merkaba is better attested traditionally), or it is a trap, but it's clearly not the exit from the matrix.

Found some associations between the Hyksos, Byblos and Nephilim. Byblos was where around 600yr later the Dionysian Artificers/Giblim/proto Freemsons came from and helped the demons build Solomons Temple.

First they rolled over Byblos.

>In the 18th centurybc new invaders, the Hyksos, destroyed Amorite rule in Byblos and, passing on to Egypt, brought the Middle Kingdom to an end (c. 1630bce).

There is DNA evidence of large scale marriage to local women by the 15th dynasty Hyksos after takeover, presumably also at high level for increased legitimacy of rule >could the kings of the 14th Dynasty have originated from the line of "Rulers of Retjenu" spanning the late 12th and 14th Dynasties (Bietak 2022)? The general consensus now leans towards Avaris, not Xoïs, as the residence of the 14th Dynasty (Redford 1970: 21–22). Moreover, on onomastic grounds, the 14th Dynasty is understood to have Western Asiatic origins

>The onomastic evidence discussed above makes it highly likely that this "Ruler of Retjenu" is a kins- man of the rulers of Byblos

>The Retjenu was one of the most important peoples of ancient Canaan. What makes them fascinating are their mysterious origins, their connection with the Hyksos as well as their strange but intimate association with a tradition about Giants.

Retjenu was the Egyptian name for the greater Syrian region and included parts of the Phoenician coast, the Canaanite lands.

>The earliest mention made of the Retjenu appears inThe Story of Sinuhe. Set during the time of the early 12th Dynasty, this story tells about an Egyptian official who fled to Canaan after the death of King Amenemhet I, founder of the 12th Dynasty in c. 1937 BC. The author identifies the land to the north of Byblos as Retjenu.

>In the story, mention is made of Amunenshi, the ruler of Retjenu, and a certain “hero of Retjenu”, against whom Sinuhe had to fight in a one-on-one combat. Also mentioned are “rulers of renown” who controlled lands in that region, namely Meki of Qedem, the mountain chiefs of Keshu and the prince of Menus hailing from the lands of the Fenekhu.

>Evidently, the Egyptians used the name, Evidently, the Egyptians used the name, Retjenu, for both the inhabitants of the land as well as the land itself (probably named after these people). The city of Djiun, apparently an early name for Tyre, was located in Upper Retjenu. During the New Kingdom the name, Khor (Hurru), came into use and eventually replaced Retjenu as the name for Canaan, for both the inhabitants of the land as well as the land itself (probably named after these people). The city of Djiun, apparently an early name for Tyre, was located in Upper Retjenu.

Tyre was where two of the main serpent bloodlines came from, this evidence points towards Hyksos jews ruling the whole region.

>A seal impression found in the pre-Hyksos palace [dated to the 14th Dynasty], belonging to a 'Ruler of Retjenu' indicates by its personal name and its titles a close relationship to the rulers of Byblos. Also, according to Dominique Collon, the type of seal points to Byblos but the seal impression was made on local clay from the Delta. All evidence seems to indicate a residence of the 'Ruler of Retjenu' at Avaris.

>The 14th Dynasty, also called the "Lesser Hyksos", rose to the throne in Avaris during the latter part of the 18th century (perhaps c. 1720 BC), while the 13th Dynasty was still ruling the rest of Egypt from Memphis. The link between the 14th Dynasty rulers and Byblos also follows from the names of the kings of the 14th Dynasty, like Ya-Ammu and Yakub-Har for example, being quite similar to Yantin-Ammu, who ruled in Byblos earlier on.

>After the 14th Dynasty, the Hyksos succeeded them to the same throne, establishing the 15th Dynasty. They are generally assumed also to have been of Canaanite origin, with their kings having taken the title "King(s) of Foreign Lands" (Heqa khasewet). The Hyksos seem to have been of Retjenu stock. On his second stele, Kamose (fl. c. 1541-1540 BC), the last king of the 17th Dynasty, who ruled at Thebes and expelled the Hyksos from Egypt, called Apophis (Apepi), penultimate king of the Hyksos, "Chieftain of the Retjenu". He describes Avaris as having high walls with a harbour where 300 cedarwood ships docked, filled with a great variety of goods including gold, silver and "all the fine products of Retjenu".

>On the mentioned stele of Kamose, Apophis is called a "vile Asiatic (Aam)".

>Another name found among the Hyksos rulers with similar associations is Seshai. Hundreds of scaraboid seals bearing his name have been found throughout the Levant, Egypt, Nubia and as far away as Carthage. Different opinions exist among scholars as to where Seshai fits into Egyptian history. Some identify him with Salitis, founder of the Hyksos (15th) Dynasty. Others believe that he ruled later on during the Hyksos Period and still others (especially Manfred Bietak) postulate that he was a Hyksos vassal who ruled in Canaan (or perhaps some part of Egypt).

>In the case of Seshai, his name sounds exactly like Sesha, the multi-headed nâgaserpent of the Indo-Aryan tradition! As such, Seshai might have been the Indo-Aryan equivalent of the serpent, Apophis.

>That this close link with the dragon-motif is no mere coincidence is confirmed by the Egyptian priest, Manetho, who emphasises the traditional, even priestly, source for his characterisation of Avaris as “Typhonic”, in reference to Typhon, the monstrous Giant of Greek tradition.

>What is remarkable about the name, Seshai, is that it is also associated with southern Canaan. In biblical tradition, a certain Seshai from Hebron, together with his brothers, Ahiman and Talmai, are named as Anakim leaders. The Israelite spies who were sent to inspect and survey the land of Canaan after the Exodus came across the Anakim in the city of Hebron in the south, who are described as “men of great stature” or “Giants” (gibbôr).

The "don't go into the light" meme is much older than most people imagine.

"The 4th century BCE gold plate from Petelia gives the following instructions: "Thou shalt find to the left of the House of Háidēs a spring, And by the side thereof standing a white cypress. To this spring approach not near. But thou shalt find another, from the Lake of Memory Cold water flowing forth, and there are guardians before it. Say, 'I am a child of Earth and starry Heaven; But my race is of Heaven (alone). This ye know yourselves. But I am parched with thirst and I perish. Give me quickly The cold water flowing forth from the Lake of Memory.' And of themselves they will give thee to drink of the holy spring. And thereafter among the other heroes thou shalt have lordship." This tells of the route and words to say. The Spirit travels on the path on the right over the Plain of Lethe ("forgetfulness"), and at the end is parched with thirst. Proving it is pure, it may drink from the Lake of Memory, escaping the cycle of birth as a divinity. The Spirit is then "adopted" into the family of gods by Persephónē-Kórē, bestower of immortality."

We'll start with onalatro again because, well, wtf.

>Onolatry is the worship of the donkey during antiquity. In Imperial Rome, the charge of onolatry was used as a polemic against Jews and Jewish Christians. The association of Jews with donkeys was a common feature of Hellenic as well as Latin ethnographic and historical writings, and included accusations of worshipping a golden donkey head and even sacrificing foreigners to it at intervals.

"Historian. He wrote Tactics in 2 books, [and] On the Jews; in which [latter] he says that they bowed down to the golden head of an ass and every seven years hunted a stranger and attacked him and tore his flesh into thin strips and thus killed him."
(Damocritus, Suda, Delta #49)

It's recorded by the Romans that they ate the guy too, Jews have a taste for Greeks apparently and Aryans in general, especially children.

>The notion of the evil (Judean) creator had existed for centuries in native Egyptian revisionary mythology. The notion was thus already prepared for its early Christian application to the Judeo-catholic creator. Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans identified the evil god Seth-Typhon (often depicted as a donkey-like creature) with the Jewish god Yahweh. The Seth-Yahweh tradition, with all its negative valence, was then applied to the creator worshiped by Christians as well. Evidence for this view comes from the early Christian depiction of the creator and his sons in donkey (Typhonian) form. In addition to material culture (gems, amulets, and graffiti), four texts are analyzed in this chapter: The Birth of Mary, the Secret Book of John, the so-called Ophite diagram, and the Phibionites described by Epiphanius.

The image displays a fragment of a ceramic piece with a blue background and a pattern of stylized figures. The figures are anthropomorphic, with human-like features and are depicted in a dynamic pose, suggesting movement or action. They are wearing garments that are patterned with geometric shapes and lines, and their hair is styled in a manner that is characteristic of ancient or traditional art styles. The figures are holding what appears to be a staff or a pole, and their expressions are not clearly discernible due to the fragmentary nature of the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of ancient or traditional art, possibly from a historical period, given the style of the figures and the style of the pottery. There are no texts present in the image.

>The Greeks identified him with Typhon, the lord of chaos and a monster, resulting in the hybrid form "Seth-Typhon". Seth was also identified with the Phoenician storm god, Baal. Through the cultural practice of interpretatio Graeca (identification of foreign gods), the malignant character of Seth and his donkey appearance were transferred to the god of the Jews, Yahweh (YHVH). This fusion (Seth-Yahweh) was reinforced, in part, by the sound: the Greek word for Yahweh (Iaō) sounded, with a "perverse twist of the tongue," like the native Egyptian word for donkey (eiō or iō). This led to the widely known tradition that the Jews secretly worshipped Yahweh as a donkey or the golden head of an ass (onolatry) in the Temple of Jerusalem. Early Christian groups who believed in an evil creator (such as the Phibionites, Ophites, and Sethians) adapted this "Seth-Yahweh cultural memory" to identify the Jewish creator as a hostile, demonic ruler. This tradition manifested in their cosmology, such as the description of a being with the "face or form of a donkey (onou morphēn)" seen in the Holy of Holies in the apocryphal The Birth of Mary. Furthermore, the seventh ruling demon in the Ophite diagram (drawn by Christian theologians in the 2nd century A.D.) manifests a "donkey face (onou . . . prosopon)" and is called Onoel ("Donkey-God"). Due to the majority Christians' adoption of the Jewish Creator as the supreme deity, the accusation of donkey worship was easily transferred to Christians. This polemic culminated in a mocking representation displayed on a plaque around the late 2nd century A.D. in Carthage (or Rome) of a being with donkey ears and a hoof labeled: "ONOCOETES, GOD OF THE CHRISTIANS"

>But I should think that if the Jews had such an antipathy against a hog, they would kill it as the magicians do mice; when, on the contrary, they are by their religion as much prohibited to kill as to eat it. And perhaps there may be some reason given for this; for as the ass is worshipped by them as the first discoverer of fountains. (Plutarch, Quæstiones Conviviales 4.5.2)

>Those who say that Typhon fled from the battle on an ass for seven days, and having been saved produced sons, Hierosolymus and Judeaus, are at this point clearly dragging Jewish issues into the story." (Plutarch, De Iside et Osiride 363C-D)

>Nothing, however, distressed them so much as the scarcity of water, and they had sunk ready to perish in all directions over the plain, when a herd of wild asses was seen to retire from their pasture to a rock shaded by trees. Moyses followed them, and, guided by the appearance of a grassy spot, discovered an abundant spring of water. This furnished relief. After a continuous journey for six days, on the seventh they possessed themselves of a country, from which they expelled the inhabitants, and in which they founded a city and a temple. an image of the animal by whose guidance they found deliverance from their long and thirsty wanderings." (Tacitus, Histories V:3-4)

The image depicts a stylized illustration of a figure that appears to be a deity or a mythological creature. The figure is standing upright with a confident posture, holding a staff in one hand and a staff in the other. The figure's attire consists of a golden, patterned garment that covers the torso and a white, draped garment that covers the legs. The head of the figure is adorned with a large, horned headdress, and the eyes are a striking red color. The figure's skin is a light brown, and the hair is a darker shade, possibly black or dark brown. The background of the image is plain white, which contrasts with the figure and highlights the details of the attire and the staff. There are no discernible texts or additional objects in the image. The style of the image is realistic with a focus on the detailed depiction of the figure's attire and the staff.

Then we have the quite damning account of Manetho, an Egyptian scribe (early 3rd century BC), which describes two stages of what would become the biblical confabulation Exodus as a hostile takeover of Egypt by Hyksos jews who then committed all sorts of atrocities, as jews generally do, then were driven out to Jerusalem. Followed by another wave consisting of various lepers and miscreants sent to Avaris, the old Hysos capital and Set's HQ, then starting a rebellion in league with Hyksos from Jerulaselm. This being led by a leper Moses, pretty much a zombie, previously a priest of Osiris at Heliopolis, turned to the dark side of Set/yhwh and devilry. Again they were driven out.

<https://www.jasoncolavito.com/manetho.html>

"The Hyksos King Apophis is recorded as worshiping Set exclusively, as described in the following passage: [He] chose for his Lord the god Seth. He did not worship any other deity in the whole land except Seth."

>The close relation between the God of the Semitic Hyksos and Typhon-Seth is an established fact, and it appears now that not only the names of Baal, but also of Sabbaoth and even of Yahveh were frequently identified with this powerful war god of Lower Egypt. In the first centuries of the Christian era Christian influence made itself felt, and Typhon-Seth was confounded with Seth the son of Adam, who was revered as a prototype and prior incarnation of Jesus Christ.

The oldest myths we still retain put the kike at Mt. Sarsar ie. Mt. Seir in Jordan around the area of Petra (then called Edom) where they were known as Suteans, Shasu, and Hibiru. They took over the temple belonging to the Horites here, prior to this they were murderous nomadic bandits in the Sinai.

>Mount Seir (Hebrew: הַר-שֵׁעִיר, romanized: Har Sē'ir) is the ancient and biblical name for a mountainous region stretching between the Dead Sea and the Gulf of Aqaba in the northwestern region of Edom and southeast of the Kingdom of Judah. It may also have marked the older historical limit of Ancient Egypt in Canaan. A place called "Seir, in the land of Shasu" (tî-š'w s'r – ta-Shasu se'er), thought to be near Petra, Jordan, is listed in the temple of Amenhotep III at Soleb (ca. 1380 BC)

Jews literally came from Mt. Doom in Edom.

<http://www.acacialand.com/edom.html>

"The earliest Israelites, semi-nomadic highlanders in central Canaan mentioned on the Merneptah Stele at the end of the 13th century BCE, are to be identified as a Shasu enclave. Since later Biblical tradition portrays Yahweh "coming forth from Seir", the Shasu, originally from Moab and northern Edom/Se'ir, went on to form one major element in the amalgam that would constitute the "Israel" which later established the Kingdom of Israel. Per his own analysis of the el-Amarna letters, Anson Rainey concluded that the description of the Shasu best fits that of the early Israelites."

Most wouldn't think of violence in association with sacred geometry, most. The pattern discussed in /dgg/ #1, the Lo Shu magic square of 9, Seal of Saturn, was used as basis for a highly effective sword technique in Spain as well as footwork for Tai Chi in China. In many ways it was the peak of sword art.

>Joy Hancox's researches established that the geometric lattice involved was the floor plan used in the training practices of a rapier fencing style called la destreza ("the skill"). This was, in its time, the most formidable sword form of Western martial arts. Known often as "the Spanish circle," it dominated throughout the centuries of rapier dueling from the late 1500s onward. The technique itself originated with Jerónimo de Carranza in 1569. Figures 7.1 as well as 7.8–7.10) are all from L'Académie de L'Épée written about la destreza in the early 1600s by Gerard Thibault. It is said to have been the only esoteric martial art ever developed in the West.

The image is a black and white illustration that depicts a scene within a grand, classical-style building. The architecture features a series of arches and columns, with a central dome above. The floor is paved with a geometric pattern, and there are statues and sculptures adorning the walls.

In the center of the image, a group of people is gathered, seemingly in a state of celebration or ceremony. They are dressed in historical clothing, suggesting a time period that is not modern. The individuals are holding objects that appear to be weapons, such as swords and shields, which are also part of the attire.

The people are arranged in a semi-circular formation, with some facing the camera and others turned away, creating a sense of depth and perspective. The overall composition of the image suggests a narrative, possibly depicting a historical event or ceremony.

The absence of color and the detailed depiction of the clothing and weapons contribute to the historical and realistic feel of the artwork.

The image is a page from a book or a publication, likely a technical or academic one, as indicated by the text and the layout. The page is divided into two sections, each containing a different type of diagram.

On the left side, there is a diagram that appears to be a grid or a grid-like structure with lines and dots. The grid is filled with a pattern that resembles a series of interconnected squares or polygons. The grid is divided into two columns, with the top column containing a series of smaller squares or polygons, and the bottom column containing larger squares or polygons. The lines connecting the squares or polygons are straight and evenly spaced, creating a pattern that is consistent throughout the grid.

On the right side, there is a diagram that is a star-like structure with a central point and a series of lines radiating outward from it. The star has a symmetrical design with a central point and evenly spaced lines radiating outward in a circular pattern. The lines connecting the points of the star are straight and evenly spaced, creating a pattern that is consistent throughout the star.

The overall style of the image is academic and technical, with a focus on geometric patterns and symmetry. The use of lines and dots to create the grid and star-like structure is a common technique in mathematics and geometry to represent complex shapes and patterns.

It determined one of the classical layouts of the Pa Kua—the eight trigrams of the Chinese oracle of changes, the I Ching. >The Yu Bu was performed "shamanically" by a practitioner seen as representing, and invoking publicly, the powers of the universal Tao. The dance took in all the trigrams of the I Ching. It also stepped out a count of the "Nine Stars in the Heavens." Some of the visualizations indicated to be done by the practitioner, are extraordinarily vivid, and the powers invoked are accorded the status of military generals. So the dance had a martial, self-defended character infusing its stance toward the four directions. It comes as no surprise that more recently the numerical sequence has been equated with the transfer of a practitioner's weight in the movements of the "supreme ultimate" martial art of tai chi chuan.

>Yubu, translated as Pace(s) of Yu or Step(s) of Yu, is the basic mystic dance step of religious Daoism. This ancient walking or dancing technique typically involves dragging one foot after another, and is explained in reference to the legendary Yu the Great, who became lame on one side of his body from exerting himself while establishing order in the world after the Great Flood. Daoist religions, especially during the Six Dynasties period (220–589), incorporated Yubu into rituals, such as the Bugang 步罡 "pace the Big Dipper", in which a Taoist priest would symbolically walk the nine stars of the Beidou 北斗 "Big Dipper" in order to acquire that constellation's supernatural energy.

The other pattern mentioned by the Daoists in association with the Lo Shou is the Yellow River Map.

"TheHetu "Yellow River Chart" and theLuoshu"Inscription of the River Luo" were two cosmological diagrams used in ancient China. They were employed by bothDaoistsandConfuciansand served to explain the correlation of the hexagrams of theYijing"Book of Changes" with the universe and human life. They are also used in geomancy (fengshui)."

"TheHan period (206 BCE-220 CE) scholarKong Anguo, author of a commentary on theShangshu, was the first who who mentioned the legend of a dragon horse (longma) that emerged out of the Yellow River. Its back was said to be patterned with the shape of the eight trigrams. The diagram on the back of the horse was the so-called "River Chart" that was fixed by the mythological emperorFu Xiand was preserved in the shape of the eight trigrams."

"As an auspicious omen, the horse is reported to have regularly appeared during the reigns of the virtuous rulersYao,Shun, andYu.Confuciuslamented that during his lifetime, the miraculous horse (often translated as "unicorn") did not appear again, which was a bad portent of unlucky times."

"Both inscriptions are mentioned in theXici commentary of theYijing. The sage rulers read and interpreted the "River Chart" and the "Luo Inscription" and modelled their reign according to the evidence provided in the two diagrams. Yet the same text also says that Fu Xi invented the arrangement of the trigrams after observing the starry sky and all things on earth, but it does not refer to the "River Chart"."

The image is a photograph of a traditional Chinese temple with a serene and tranquil atmosphere. The temple is situated in a lush garden with a variety of trees and plants, providing a natural backdrop. The temple's architecture is characterized by a red roof and white walls, which contrast with the surrounding greenery. The entrance to the temple is a red door with a white arch, and there are two stone lions on either side of the entrance, adding to the traditional aesthetic.

In front of the temple, there is a stone pathway leading up to the entrance, which is flanked by two stone lions on either side. The pathway is lined with lampposts, and there are people standing on the pathway, suggesting that the temple is a popular destination for visitors. The sky is overcast, and the lighting in the image is soft, enhancing the peaceful and contemplative mood of the scene. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is realistic, capturing the details of the temple and its surroundings with clarity and precision.

>A dragon horse is the [qi(氣)] vital spirit of Heaven and Earth. As a being its shape consists of a horse's body, yet it has dragon scales. Therefore it is called 'dragon horse'. Its height is eightch'ihfivets'un. A true dragon horse has wings at its sides and walks upon the water without sinking. If a holy man is on the throne it comes out of the midst of the Ming river, carrying a map on its back

>A subsequentBamboo Annalscontext describes the spirit of the Yellow River as a person rather than a dragon-horse, and says Yao rather than Yu received theHetuin order to control theGreat Flood.

>As he was looking at the Ho [Yellow River], a tall man, with a white face and fish's body, came out and said, 'I am the spirit of the Ho.' He then called Yu, and said, 'Wan-ming [Yu] shall regulate the waters.' Having so spoken, he gave Yu a chart of the Ho, containing all about the regulating of the waters; and returned into the deep.

This is the "source code" spoken of in the last thread, to produce order from chaos, still rather elusive, related here to a spiritual state and the dragon horse or Longma. The "chart on the prognostication dish of the Great Unity of the Nine Palaces"has the same distribution of numbers and might be worth deciphering, linked below.

The document appears to be a scholarly article or essay, as indicated by the presence of an abstract section. The abstract section is highlighted in a different color, which is purple, and it contains the text "Carr Anton Paul Ruck" followed by a paragraph of text. The text is in English and discusses the natural occurrence of megliochi structures in the region identified as Thrace, which are believed to be the foot of religious observances, and the origin of Dionysian rites. Wine was recognized as the product of fungi growth and was a significant part of the Dionysian rites. The text also mentions the legendary wine of Thrace and its association with the deity in his person that predated viticulture. The document seems to be a scholarly work, possibly a research paper or an academic article, discussing the historical and cultural aspects of Thrace and its connection to wine and religious observances.

something i forgot to post and it is related to the Electrical Universe, from the good old Spaniard, EvropaSoberana

ABOUT THE IONS

In this section I am going to concentrate, not only on the chemical contamination of the air (gases, smoke, dust, smog, chemical products, etc.), which is well known, but on the ionic contamination of certain environments. We should sit down to think that a human being can survive maybe two months without food and maybe two weeks without water, but without air, his death is a matter of minutes. We never stop breathing or introduce into our body what surrounds us, with which the state of the air influences in an absolutely decisive way in our health —and, as we will see, in the bioelectric balance of even the last cell of our body.

Negative ions (or anions), very small and extremely active molecular pieces, and possessing a negative electrical charge equivalent to that of an electron. The benefits of negative ions are widely described, including neutralization of unpleasant odors, bacteria and pollen (thus of allergies and infections), freshness, great reduction of environmental pollution, general invigoration of the body, etc. Many air filtration devices (as in hospitals) are equipped with negative ion generators, which are also considered a plus for air conditioners. Furthermore, a good amount of negative ions inside and outside of our cells greatly enhances all the body's biological functions.

How is air ionized? Naturally, thanks to shortwave electromagnetic radiation from the Sun and other cosmic rays, which bombard the molecules of the air energizing its fragments. The importance of these cosmic rays is seen in the article Bioelectricity and Astral Magnetism. Another natural ionizer is the evaporation and movement of the large masses of water, as well as the movement of the wind ("friction") over large open spaces. In this way, it is not surprising that the greatest charges of negative ions or atmospheric chi are found in the fresh air of rural areas, the churning coasts, the beaches, the parks and, especially, of the mountainous heights, where the solar radiation and Cosmic is more intense, where the wind blows strong and incessantly, and where there is water in the form of Ibones, lakes, very beaten and oxygenated currents, and frequent precipitation. It is in the moments after a great storm that the concentration of negative ions reaches its highest levels. The mountains bring man closer to nobility and kindness. Our ancestors were not wrong when they attributed mystical qualities to the mountains related to the divinification of the hero, health and closeness to the gods. The summits—where the cosmic rays give stronger, where the ground is closer to the sky, where the air and the water are pure and crystalline, where each bare rock is the result of a bitter resistance against the incessant wind, where everything is tanned, Oxygenated and in continuous renewal—these are the places where there are the highest concentrations of negative ions and Aether, especially after the storms. Not to mention the rising telluric currents, which by "funnel effect" always end up being channeled towards the slopes and accumulating in its peaks, true energy centers of the planet. Those who have had the privilege of spending days or even weeks benefiting from such a source of health know well what I am talking about.

While negative ions have a most desirable health effect, positive ions (or cations, static) are exactly the opposite, since they are formed from dust, smoke and toxic chemicals, in the form of large polymolecular ions, charging positive (same as protons), and that have the effect of annulling negative ions by attracting them, capturing them and neutralizing them. This causes tiredness, discomfort, allergies, weakness, lack of adequate oxygenation, and leads to a multitude of diseases. It is also shown that positive ions increase body production of serotonin (the famous "stress hormone").

To give an idea about the distribution of negative and positive ions, it is worth saying that in the field areas there are usually around three negative ions for each positive ion. In cities, this proportion is reversed in an absolutely disproportionate way, easily reaching figures greater than five hundred positive ions for each negative ion. In case the environmental pollution in the form of dust, chemical substances and pernicious fumes from factories and vehicles were not enough to neutralize and more than counteract the benefits of scarce negative ions, we also have the de-ionizer effect of air conditioning devices. (Those that are not provided with negative ion generators), synthetic fiber clothing, central heating, plastic materials and closed spaces. It is a well-known fact that a working day in an office leaves workers exhausted without having made any physical effort, while a mountaineer, after an intense day of mountaineering, will certainly be fatigued, but in no way "crushed", but invigorated, cheerful, fresh and with morality. HIGH. It is also the reason why, during the first years of the space program, astronauts, despite being well-trained and excellent health, were absolutely destroyed and ended up seriously dizzy after just a few hours inside a capsule, whether orbiting in space as if they were rehearsing on the earth. When the cause of the problem was discovered was due to the metal of the capsules, the devices did not take long to be equipped with negative ion generators that created a beneficial artificial atmosphere inside, allowing astronauts to spend even months in space.

WAYS TO AVOID POSITIVE IONS AND IMPROVE THE EFFECTS OF NEGATIVE IONS

In a site as highly de-ionized as the current polluted world of large cities, some simple guidelines can be followed to reduce the horrible impact that this environment has on our bodies and minimize Aggressions to our precious bioelectrical system, which is the key to individual growth and balance.

1. Frequent rural areas of pure air, especially mountains: exercising in the areas mentioned to oxygenate to the last cell of our body with that beneficial air. Highly recommended mountaineering and camping, as well as skiing or snowing.
2. Avoid "as far as possible" enclosed environments loaded with tobacco, kitchen fumes, and little ventilated, or ventilated by air conditioning devices and central heaters without negative ion generators: on the other hand —and although I know it sounds Paranoid—In closed environments with a lot of staff concentration, the air is full of the effluvium (breath, perspiration and often worse things) of people who are not precisely having healthy habits. In the same way that with the smoke of others we become passive smokers, with the effluvium of others we are also estrogening, contaminating and de-ionizing "passively". It is clear that in modern life it is impossible to avoid large human concentrations (tails, crowds, public transport, gyms) and that it is normal to be part of several in a week – but the ideal is to keep them fair and necessary.
3. Avoid "as far as possible" fluorescent tubes and new CFL bulbs: no matter how much they are a form of low consumption lighting, they also constitute a source of de-ionization, artificial electromagnetic fields and dirty electricity.

4. Avoid "as far as possible" the TV and computer screens: since they are sources of de-ionization and electromagnetic fields of undesirable charge, as we see in the article about electrosmog. Good idea to get ionizers (there are specific to screens) that correct the situation, especially for those who work regularly with PCs. Bad idea of all those people who systematically leave the TV or the PC on even though they are not paying attention to it, since what they get This is to contaminate the electromagnetic field of an entire room. To say nothing of the people who watch several hours of TV a day, who are the majority, or of the kids who spend their childhood playing with a console. According to Taoism, these devices emit waves that reach the eye, ascend the optic nerve and deactivate the pituitary gland, associated with the sixth chakra and the "third eye", the organ of the creative imagination.
5. There are certain winds, such as those that arrive from the Sahara desert, which contain a pernicious charge of positive ions. It is known, for example, the negative psychological effect of the Levante wind (a true avalanche of positive ions) on Cadiz, and this is recognized to such an extent that it constitutes a mitigating circumstance in case of committing a crime. Something similar happens with winds like Tramontana or Sirocco (Spain), Sharav (Israel), Föhn (Germany, Switzerland, Austria), Chinook (Canada), Berg (South Africa), Afganet (Asia central) or Hamsin (Middle East). On the contrary, the cooler and cleaner north winds tend to contain a very beneficial charge of negative ions. It is obvious that the winds cannot be "avoided", but at least it is interesting to be aware of the reason for this phenomenon, which has the ability to alter our mood in a radical way.

6.Avoid "as far as possible" the great cities: since many have the misfortune of living in large cities, at least try to spend long time in parks (that if they are not taken by whores, junkies, travelers and ethnic bands), and organize Getaways to country areas, especially mountainous. Dedicate himself to canyoning, climbing, canoeing, mountaineering, simple walks or whatever, but making sure of energizing the body well, at the very least once a week, with a pure "real" air.

7.Avoid "as far as possible" the interior of cars: because of the bodies and plastic materials (producers of estrogen saturated odors, by the way), they are usually generated inside the cars negative electric fields (repelling negative ions And they attract the positives), with which the people who take the car even to go shit do not stop me. This inertia is the cause of the sleeping inside the car so common, even though nothing is being done to "get tired".

8.Avoid plasticized materials: they have a deionizing effect and also, due to their chemical constitution, they are dismissing pro-estrogenic substances. Avoid plastic furniture or plastic children's toys, and be aware of what a lot of appliances (toasters, mixers, microwaves, refrigerators, etc.) of plastic means.

9.Remove carpets: They act as sponges that hold bubbles of hot and vitiated air, positive ions, bacteria, dust particles, mites, cleaning chemicals and other undesirable agents. They are a cause of weight in many discomforts, especially respiratory and allergy-related. A hard, smooth floor can be swept and scrubbed thoroughly and easily.

Anonymous Tue 02 Dec 2025 15:56:25 No.41598473 Report

10.Buy an ionizer (negative ion generator): Install negative ion generators in the air conditioners that we use, in our car or simply in rooms where we spend a lot of time. The Japanese, who are well familiar with the concept of Ki, have been working in atmospheres ionized by generators for a long time, which to a certain extent can be the cause of their great productivity and performance. As I have said, everyone knows that driving "stunned" and "tired", not only because of the estrogens dismissed by the plastic upholstery material and others, but also by the charge of positive ions that accumulates due to the electromagnetic field of the motor and the materials of the chassis and bodywork. If everyone had an artifact of those mentioned in their car, "road tiredness" would be a thing of the past, that tendency for our passengers to fall asleep automatically on long trips would not appear, and, in addition, road accidents would be reduced by saving quite a few lives, since Reflections and attention would be refined.

11. Even if one lives in a healthy area with a powerful natural electric field, the benefits of environmental ionization can be nullified by wearing rubber shoes, dressing with synthetic fibers, living locked between furniture and plastic objects, or not ventilating the house, because everything This tends to isolate the body from so beneficial atmospheric electricity. To check what I say, just walk barefoot and without a headdress, dressed in light cotton garments, through a field or garden in a rural area that still preserves the morning dew. The wet grass (it will be the cause of the high esteem that almost all European cultures had by the dew or "moonwater", relating it to megalithic monuments) acts as a magnetic pole, literally absorbing the energy of the sky through our body, something which has an incredibly energizing effect. Walking barefoot and on natural soil "whenever possible".

The image is a black and white line drawing that depicts a complex circular pattern with numerous small figures arranged in a spiral formation. The figures are depicted in various poses, suggesting movement or action. The pattern is composed of a series of concentric circles, with each circle containing a smaller circle within it, creating a sense of depth and complexity.

In the upper right corner of the image, there is a series of Chinese characters, which appear to be a translation or description of the pattern. The characters are written in a traditional Chinese script, with the characters "轮转" and "轮转" being the most prominent. The characters translate to "round" and "round" respectively, which could be interpreted as a description of the circular pattern.

The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Chinese ink painting, characterized by its simplicity and focus on line and form. The absence of color and the use of black and white give the image a timeless and classic feel. The image does not contain any additional elements or decorations, focusing solely on the pattern and the accompanying text.

These paces of Yu are likely another cargo cult type practice, but an old one which is interesting. It's where daoism and therefore neigong ties back into shamanism, more spontaneous trance states, movements, and otherworldly voyages. Neigong and yoga are great for health and wellbeing but don't generally work as advertised, well except for that one guy. They are signposts, and contain partial truths, which is what we are looking for itt.

Of note is the dimensional "gate" associated with the Bear/swastika which is consistent across many cultures, Aryan or those with our imprint. Alchemy has the same concept, as does Serrano. The Yu steps focus distictly on the shape of the constellation and its connection to the underlying magic square 9. These star patterns are archetypes, keys if you will to unlocking universal forces, both the shapes, the actual light, and the myths/godforms. There is formalized neigong methods involving light from different constellations, probably too rigid for the range of probabilities involved, but again related.

Couldn't help but notice Bifrost at the launchpad, top of picture previous post.

Bifrost, is a burning bridge that reaches between Midgard (Earth) and Asgard, the realm of the gods. Both the Poetic Edda and the Prose Edda also refer to the bridge as Ásbrú (Old Norse "Æsir's bridge").

Green.

>According to the Prose Edda, the bridge ends in heaven at Himinbjörg, the residence of the god Heimdall, who guards it from the jötnar. The bridge's destruction during Ragnarök by the forces of Muspell is foretold. Scholars have proposed that the bridge may have originally represented the Milky Way and have noted parallels between the bridge and another bridge in Norse mythology, Gjallarbrú. It may also represent other phenomena, such as the Aurora Borealis, which fits better with the notions of it being fiery and having three colours, while a rainbow form is very distinct and well-known, being stable and not fiery, with more numerous colours always in the same order. Also, rainbows do not end in the heavens, but appear to arch back and return to the land.

Have I heard this story before?

The image is a graphical representation of a celestial phenomenon, likely a solar system or galaxy, with a focus on the motion of celestial bodies. The background is black, and the image is divided into three main sections: the silver gate, the golden gate, and the ecliptic plane.

The silver gate is depicted as a large, curved, yellow line that encircles the entire image. It is labeled with the word "silver gate" in white text. The golden gate is represented by a smaller, green line that encircles the silver gate, and it is labeled with the word "golden gate" in white text.

The ecliptic plane is shown as a white line that runs horizontally across the image. It is labeled with the words "ecliptic plane" in white text.

The image also includes two red circles with white text, which likely represent the positions of celestial bodies. The text within the red circles is not fully legible due to the resolution of the image.

The image is labeled with the text "silver gate" and "golden gate" in the upper left and right corners, respectively. The text "ecliptic plane" is located in the lower left corner.

The image is a scientific illustration, likely used to explain the motion of celestial bodies in the solar system or galaxy.

Again in the region of Ophiuchus and the Tree, x marks the spot, hoist the main. Silver gate is the gate of man incarnating. Golden gate is a door to heaven.

>The ecliptic is the apparent path the Sun takes through the constellations over the course of a year, defined by Earth's orbit around the Sun. The galactic plane is the midplane of the Milky Way Galaxy, as viewed from our position within it. These two great circles on the celestial sphere intersect at exactly two points, termed the "galactic nodes." Astronomers use these nodes to relate galactic coordinates to the more familiar ecliptic-based system.

>Over centuries, various cultures have interpreted these points with symbolic meaning. For example, traditions and esoteric interpretations refer to them as "gates." The intersection near the constellation Sagittarius and Ophiuchus, pointing toward the Galactic Center, is sometimes called the "Golden Gate," while the opposite intersection near Taurus and Orion is often referred to as the "Silver Gate."

>Since the Greek inherited much of their wisdom from the Egyptians, it's more than reasonable to suspect that the gate or portal mentioned in the Book of the Gates through which the pharaoh enters the Netherworld is, in fact, the Gate of God that the Greek writer Macrobius writes about. The Gate of God was also called the Golden Gate, while the Gate of Men was called the Silver Gate. The very same Egyptian cross symbolism used by the pharaohs associated with the Golden and Silver gates of the soul (and the Sun) can still be recognized in the coat of arms of the Vatican, consisting of two crossed keys; one Golden, one Silver.

Also the skull and crossbones if I'm not mistaken.

Might as well write about this, retarded to talk about dimensional gates so much and not mention it, and hey might brighten the narrative with some outlandish contention.

This bits just back story really, but the rest will make less sense without it.

Started hunting the devil in my late teens, noticed there was sometimes demons in my dreams, worked out a way of inducing horrible nightmares, and began slaughtering them. Always hated evil. At first fields full of demons in battle, but as it progressed, down through the winding tunnels and the raging ocean of the abyss, there was less of them but they were more fucked up.

Learned then there was a path here, hanged man to the dancer, the razors edge, death and madness etc. A fools chance. Knew it was mine, but still would have turned back if not for the life of another, required a step into the dark, and the light went out in me like flicking a switch.

So I hunted the fucking things, killed countless monsters and abominations, every night demon dreams, snakes, tunnels, rooms, the maze got deeper for 13yrs. This is the labyrinth. Far past madness and ruin, to the very bitter edge of no return. A horror story. Where the ultimate portal guardian lurks, the donkey god, the demiurge.

Always wanted to kill the thing, which is weird really, I mean who does that? Kek, work in progress. Anyway that sets the scene for the gate saga, which was not long before the terminus or base experience in the astral, and likely had some effect on the outcome.

Who is Enêpsigos?

>I am Enêpsigos, who also have a myriad name ... What seekest, what askest thou? I undergo changes, like the goddess I am called. And I change again and pass into possession of another shape. And be not desirous therefore to know all that concern me. But since thou art before me for this much, hearken. I have my abode in the moon, and for that reason, I possess three forms. At times I am magically invoked by the wise as Kronos. At other times, in connection with those who bring me down, I come down and appear in another shape. The measure of the element is inexplicable and indefinable, and not to be frustrated. I then, changing into these three forms, come down and become such as thou seest me; but I am frustrated by the angel Rathanael, who sits in the third heaven. This then is why I speak to thee. Yonder temple cannot contain me.

The image is a collage of various ancient artifacts and texts, primarily focusing on the origins and characteristics of deities and their representations. The collage includes images of statues, reliefs, and sculptures, each with a distinct style and historical context.

Moving to the top right, there is a depiction of a figure with a crown and a crescent moon, which is reminiscent of the ancient Egyptian god Osiris. The figure is shown in a dynamic pose, suggesting movement and power.

Below these images, there are two texts that provide historical context and information about the deities. The first text, located in the center of the image, states, "The origin of Allah the Triple Goddess is Semitic, making the crescent moon their later symbol." This suggests that the crescent moon is a symbol associated with the goddess of Islam, which is a significant aspect of the image.

The second text, located in the bottom left, reads, "Hulal, and Ishhtar, share a common Semitic origin, making the crescent moon their later symbol." This text also supports the idea that the crescent moon is a symbol associated with the goddess of Islam.

The bottom of the image features a relief of a figure with a crescent moon and a star, which is reminiscent of the ancient Egyptian god Horus. The relief is set against a dark background, emphasizing the intricate details of the figure.

Overall, the image presents a collage of ancient artifacts and texts that explore the origins and characteristics of deities, particularly focusing on the crescent moon and the goddess of Islam. The collage is designed to provide a visual representation of these concepts, with each artifact and text contributing to the overall theme.

>In the most primordial symbolism, the Moon signifies the passive receptivity of manifestation, the luminous reflection of the principial Light. The feminine, thus identified with the lunar, represents the mirror through which the Divine Intellect projects the multiplicity of forms. Hence the figure of the Triple Goddess expressing the ternary rhythm of becoming: generation, fullness, and dissolution.

Among the Arabs, as among the Greeks, this triad appears as Al-Lat, Al-Uzza, and Manat, counterparts of Selene, Artemis, and Hecate three modalities of the same potency.

Capricorn marks the Gate of the Gods, the polar threshold where the soul may ascend from generation to the Principle. Opposite lies Cancer, the Gate of Men, through which beings descend into birth. Between these two portals unfolds the cycle of manifestation, ruled by Saturn, lord of time, and the Moon, mirror of becoming. Saturn, the outermost sphere, is the limit of form the ring of necessity woven by the Moirai, the Greek image of karma. The Moon is the matrix of generation, the mirror through which the spirit's light becomes refracted into multiplicity. Together they define the enclosure of the cosmos, the realm of Chronos and Anánke, where all souls revolve within the wheel of samsara.

>This enclosure is the domain of the Demiurge, or Seth-Yaldabaoth, the "god of this world," who mistakes reflection for reality. The Moon-Saturn polarity is his veil: the cycle of birth and death sustained by time and illusion. Yet the same Saturn who binds also guards the Gate of release. When the intellect awakens and turns its gaze from reflection to source, the lunar illusion becomes transparency, and the saturnian ring opens into eternity. Thus the world, once prison, becomes passage; the Moon regains her light, and Chronos is transfigured into the timeless Logos.

Zār is a possession cult found primarily in Northeast Africa and the Middle East, in Ethiopia, Sudan, Egypt, Somalia, Eritrea, and also in Iran. The term Zār designates both the spirit and the ritual associated with it. It is believed that certain illnesses, states of hysteria, or melancholy are caused by Zār spirits that have "settled" in a person. The ritual, conducted by women or shamans, involves music, dance, trance, drums, sacrifices, and perfumes (to please the spirit). Healing occurs when the spirit is appeased and "agrees" to coexist without causing harm. The Zār are conceived as spirits of the air, often of foreign origin (Ethiopian, Turkish, Arab, etc.), reflecting ancient layers of syncretism between African, Semitic, and Islamic religions.

>In all Afroasiatic civilizations, the memory persists of intermediary, subtle entities, made of breath and fire, which inhabit the air between worlds, the invisible domain where the spirit moves like the wind. The Zār of Northeast Africa, the Djinn of Islam, the Dybbukim of the Kabbalah, and even the riding spirits of Voodoo and the East represent, under diverse names, a single ontological category: pneumatic beings, residues or reflections of ancient cosmic powers. In origin, these powers belonged to the order of the air daimones, the "wind spirits" of the Semites and proto-Africans, which translate the vital breath (ruach, pneuma, ka, ashe) as the vehicle of consciousness. When mankind distanced itself from the spiritual center, these intermediaries, once messengers and guardians of the spheres, became unstable and fallen, acting in a possessive manner, like wandering fragments of the universal soul.

>The Jewish Dybbuk is a soul deviated from the cycle of Gilgul, incapable of reintegrating itself; the Zār is a foreign wind that penetrates the body and disturbs its harmony; the Djinn, an aerial fire between the angelic and the demonic; and the exorcist or Baal Shem, heir to the primordial theurgy, seeks to restore the spirit to its place in the order. In all cases, it is a matter of an imbalance of subtle influences, a loss of correspondence between the human microcosm and the celestial macrocosm. These forces can be seen as degenerate echoes of the ancient "zodiacal spirits," the intelligences that governed the twelve signs and their seventy-two subdivisions, the "archons of the circle," which later occultist symbolism reinterpreted as the 72 genii or wind demons. Thus, modern accounts of possession, exorcism, and reincarnation would be nothing but residual manifestations of a sacred science that saw in the cosmos a hierarchy of breaths, and in man the mirror where these winds converge.

The primordial breath is the first emanation of Being, the vehicle through which the One expresses itself in the manifold. In all superior traditions, from the Sufi Nafas ar-Raḥmān to the Hellenic pneuma and the Hebrew ruah, the breath is the animating principle that transmits life to forms, the vibration that makes the cosmos breathe. This breath, which in primordial states flowed uninterrupted between the divine Intellect and the manifested world, became progressively fragmented as the intermediary hierarchies, the secondary Logoi, daimones, angels, and archons, assumed an autonomous role in the chain of manifestation. Air, in this sense, is not the physical element, but the symbol of the subtle substance that links spirit to matter, the universal mediator that makes communication between the high and the low possible. The ancients spoke of seventy-two "winds", equivalent to the zodiacal archons or decans, sidereal powers that regulated the flow of the cosmic soul through the twelve signs. Each wind corresponded to a specific divine "puff," a mode of vibration of the Logos's energy in the world. After the "fall" or twisting of the emanation, that is, when the intermediary functors began to operate as autonomous centers, forgetting their unitive origin, these winds became dispersed and inverted. What was once the harmonious respiration of the anima mundi became a cacophony of disconnected astral currents: from this arise demonic influences, djinn, prethas, dybbukim, and all forms of possession and psychic imbalance.

On the metaphysical plane, this twisting of the breath is identical to the emergence of matter, the "reflection" of spirit that believes itself to be substance. The lunar, feminine, receptive and reflective principle becomes the vehicle of densification; the mirror turns upon itself and tries to shine without the sun. The "black cube," a symbol of the state of spiritual coagulation, represents this imprisonment of the breath within form, where the circular movement of cosmic respiration converts into inorganic stagnation. The "fall" is nothing but the collapse of the universal breath: the instant when the rhythm of divine life ceases to be recognized within beings. On the path of reintegration, every initiatory way, be it the Ario-Atlantean gnosis, the Palamite doctrine of energeia, or the Sufi dhikr, seeks to restore the rhythm of the breath. To return to the respiration of the Nafas ar-Raḥmān is to reopen the channel between the center and the periphery, to reconcile the dispersed wind with the Spirit that emitted it. Thus, to understand air as a symbol is to understand the mode by which Being makes itself present: the pneuma, the ruah, the prana, all are faces of the same vital principle, which, when rediscovered and centralized, dissolves the illusory duality and reestablishes the perfect circulation of light in the cosmos.

>The idea that a twin world to Earth might lie forever out of our view can be traced back to the Greek natural philosophy concept of Antichthon (literally opposite, or against, Earth). While the term could be used to describe the parts of the Earth's surface which were unknown or beyond reach, such as the antipodes, it was applied to other worlds. The philosopher Philolaus and others of the Pythagorean school proposed that Earth orbited a "central fire". Antichthon in this conception was a second world which also orbited the same point, but was perpetually out of view of Earth's inhabitants. This world may have been introduced in Philolaus' cosmological model to explain some lunar eclipses. However regardless of its practicalities, such a planet was called for by a philosophical system which required certain symmetries and harmonies in its picture of the world, for example favouring ten objects orbiting the central fire rather than nine. However, as a site forever-unobservable, this world also served as a potential location for mythical creatures and aspects of Greek thought which were not present in the real world.

"The Counter-Earth is a hypothetical body of the Solar System that orbits on the other side of the Solar System from Earth, e.g. at the L3 Lagrange point of the Sun–Earth system. A Counter-Earth, or Antichthon (Greek: Ἀντίχθων), was hypothesized by the pre-Socratic Greek philosopher Philolaus (c.470– c.385 BC) to support his non-geocentric cosmology, in which all objects in the universe revolve around a "Central Fire" (unseen from Earth and distinct from the Sun which also revolves around it)"

"In modern times a hypothetical planet always on the other side of the Sun from Earth has been called a "Counter-Earth", [2] and has been a recurring theme in UFO claims, [3] as well as in fiction (particularly science fiction)."

The image is a collage of three distinct elements: a movie poster, a map, and a promotional poster for a television show. The movie poster on the left features a large, colorful depiction of a spacecraft with a sun in the background, suggesting a space adventure theme. The spacecraft is labeled "Journey to the Far Side of the Sun," indicating the title of the movie. The poster also includes text that reads "A film by" and "Directed by," likely referring to the director and the film's production team.

The middle section of the image shows a map with a title "Map of Krypton" and a subtitle "Showing all places mentioned in the Krypton Chronicles." The map is divided into two sections, one labeled "Old World" and the other "New World," with the Earth positioned in the center. The map is colored in shades of blue and green, with the Earth's continents and oceans depicted in detail.

The rightmost section of the image features a promotional poster for a television show. The poster is titled "Doctor Who" and includes a stylized depiction of a character with a blue and white costume, resembling the Doctor Who character from the British science fiction television series. The character is surrounded by a blue and white circle, which could be interpreted as a portal or a gateway. The text on the poster reads "Doctor Who" and "The New World," suggesting that the show is set in a new universe or a new era.

The overall style of the image is reminiscent of vintage science fiction movie posters, with a focus on space exploration and adventure. The use of bold colors and detailed imagery is typical of the genre.

The image is a schematic representation of a solar system, with the sun at the center and various celestial bodies surrounding it. The solar system is divided into four quadrants, each labeled with a letter: L1, L2, L3, and L4. The sun is depicted as a bright yellow circle with a central point, surrounded by a ring of smaller circles that represent the planets.

The planets are depicted as small, circular objects with varying shades of blue and red, indicating their distance from the sun. They are arranged in a circular pattern around the sun, with the planets closest to the sun being the most prominent and the planets farthest away being the least prominent.

The image also includes arrows pointing towards the planets, indicating their relative positions to the sun. The arrows are labeled with the letter "L" for each planet, which corresponds to the labels on the quadrants.

The image is a visual representation of the solar system, providing a clear and organized depiction of the celestial bodies and their positions relative to each other.

REPORT ON NUMERICAL EXPERIMENT ON THE POSSIBLE EXISTENCE OF AN "ANTI-EARTH,"
BY DR. R. L. DUNCOMBE,
U.S. NAVAL OBSERVATORY

To experimentally determine the dynamical effects of a planet located on the other side of the Sun from the Earth, an extra body was introduced at this position in the initial conditions for a simultaneous numerical integration of the equations of motions for the major planets of the solar system.

The numerical integration used was the Stumpf-Schubart program, described in Publications of the Astronomischen Rechen-Institut, Heidelberg, No. 18 (1966). The calculations were performed on an IBM 360/40 computer at the U. S. Naval Observatory.

The initial coordinates and velocities were derived from those given in the above reference by integrating the system to the desired epoch. All the planets from Venus to Pluto were included; the mass of Mercury was included with that of the Sun. On runs in which the anti-Earth planet, Clarion, was included, its initial coordinate and velocity vectors were taken to be the negative of those for the Earth-Moon barycenter at epoch.

The initial epoch was J.D. 21424 0000.5 and the integration, using a 2 day step length, was done backward to J.D. 2240 0000.5, a period of approximately 112 years. From the integrated coordinates an ephemeris was generated at a 240 day interval.

Since the principal perturbations occur in longitude, the following discussion of the three cases is confined to a description of the amplitude of the differences in this coordinate.

Below this, in smaller black text, it states "twin earths in conflict—which would survive?" The author's name, "ben barzman," is written in black text at the bottom of the cover.

The central part of the cover features a stylized illustration of a woman in a flowing dress. She appears to be floating above a blue and yellow swirl, which is the main visual element of the cover. The woman is depicted with a serene expression and is holding a small globe in her hand. The globe is colored in shades of blue and green, and it has a white outline.

At the bottom of the cover, there is a small black text that reads "52:130" and "50c URBANRODED." The cover also includes a small black text that says "New York Times Book Review" and "The New York Times Book Review" again, indicating the publication's review in the New York Times.

The overall style of the image is graphic and artistic, with a focus on the cover's central illustration and the text. The use of bold colors and the stylized illustration give the cover a modern and possibly futuristic feel.

>Your Earth has a dead twin that shares her orbit and is placed so exactly opposite the Earth that it can never be seen. Theories about the Earth's dark twin, which does exist, have been around for decades. They emerged because of the observed perturbations of the planets. This twin is close enough, within your Solar System, to be visible by the reflected rays from the Sun, if it were not hidden behind the Sun. Why do these matched planets place themselves exactly opposite? Put two ball bearings in a circular track and spin this, and you soon find that the balls are opposite each other. Just so do these two evenly matched planets find this position opposite each other.

"The counter-earth plays a crucial role in this system as the tenth body, fulfilling the Pythagorean reverence for the number ten as the sacred tetractys, symbolizing cosmic completeness. Positioned diametrically opposite Earth relative to the central fire, the Antichthon remains unseen from Earth, which aligns with the model's explanation for the invisibility of the central fire itself. This configuration also accounts for certain lunar eclipses by positing that the counter-earth occasionally takes the place of Earth in alignments with the Moon.[1][5] This cosmological framework is primarily attributed to Philolaos of Croton (c. 470–385 BCE), a prominent member of the Pythagorean school, though it draws from the broader teachings of Pythagoras (c. 570–495 BCE), who emphasized numerical mysticism and cosmic harmony. The model's philosophical underpinnings stem from the Pythagorean belief in the universe as an ordered whole governed by mathematical principles, where limiters and unlimiteds combine to produce structured reality, avoiding the notion of a perfectly central Earth that might imply undue privilege to humanity. By centering the cosmos on fire—the source of life and motion—Philolaos integrated ethical and metaphysical ideas, portraying the universe as a harmonious system reflective of divine proportion."

The image displays a stylized emblem with a pentagram at its center, which is a common symbol in Satanism. The pentagram is composed of five intersecting lines, with the top line being the longest and the bottom line being the shortest. Within the pentagram, there is a depiction of a goat-headed demon, which is a significant element in Satanic symbolism. The goat-headed demon is facing forward, and its horns are pointed upwards, suggesting a sense of power or dominance.

Surrounding the pentagram, there are four smaller pentagrams, each containing a different letter of the alphabet. These letters are arranged in a circular pattern around the central pentagram, creating a sense of symmetry and balance. The letters are arranged in a clockwise direction, which is a common orientation for the letters of the alphabet in many cultures.

The background of the emblem is black, which contrasts with the white elements of the emblem, making the pentagram and the goat-headed demon stand out prominently. The emblem is set against a black background, which further emphasizes the white elements and the pentagram.

There is no text present in the image, and the style of the emblem is reminiscent of traditional Satanic or occult symbolism, often used in clothing, tattoos, or other forms of body art. The emblem is a stylized representation of the pentagram, with the goat-headed demon as the central figure, and the surrounding letters representing the alphabet. The overall design is symmetrical and balanced, with a strong emphasis on the pentagram and the goat-headed demon.

Of note Counter Earth is not congruent with modern astrophysics, but the US Navy actually ran a series of experiments in the 60's to test the hypothesis, so their information at that time must have indicated the idea was at least possible, perhaps old mason texts similar to the one I posted that the moron couldn't decipher?

>From a modern astronomical perspective, a Counter-Earth at the Sun-Earth L3Lagrange point would be dynamically unstable due to gravitational perturbations from nearby planets like Venus, which approaches within 25 million miles every 584 days and shares 80% of Earth's mass, inevitably disrupting the orbit over time. Such a body would also induce measurable effects on the orbits of Mercury, Mars, comets, and even artificial satellites, none of which have been observed despite precise monitoring by space agencies like NASA. Newton's law of universal gravitation further demonstrates that no stable equilibrium exists for an Earth-mass object in this configuration, as mutual influences would cause orbital chaos rather than perpetual alignment.

The curse (picrel linked post) was made on the original Earth at the time of the fall by the demiurge, implication is it's the world of "serpents", not in a literal sense. Throughout Aryan tradition there is a link between water spirits (wave-function, abzu) and serpents, the Lady of the Lake in Authurian myth for example.

>And the Lord God said unto the serpent, Because thou hast done this, thou art cursed above all cattle, and above every beast of the field; upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life:

>And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel.

>Unto the woman he said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children; and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee.

And unto Adam he said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it: cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life;

>Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field;

In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return.

>And the Lord God said, Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil: and now, lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever:

Therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken.

>So he drove out the man; and he placed at the east of the garden of Eden Cherubims, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life.

>The history of the Nagas that we do have, textually beginning around the 7th century BC is an amazing history of ups and downs. It parallels the rise and fall of the serpent worshipped by the Semites, with the Brazen Serpent being raised in the wilderness and then broken up in the temple. Like Melusine and Sibillia, Tante Arie also loved to plunge into cool pools in her caverns of Milandre where she changed into a vouivre or serpent; bringing to mind the concept that the shape-shifting Nagas of India which were said to

A Buddha from a past age tossed a lotus seed into its placid waters, and from this grew an amazing thousand-petalled lotus that shone with the blue light of transcendental wisdom.

>Aeons went by. And then, one day, the Bodhisattva Manjusri, a central Asian version of Apollo, who, having heard tales of the lotus and its light, arrived at the lotus lake to contemplate its splendour. He stopped at the edge, and being thwarted by the nagas, found that he could not approach the lotus. However, after consulting with Vajra Yogini, a manifestation of Dolma/Tara the mother goddess, he decided on a radical plan. He would drain the lake, bind the nagas and thereby share the lotus light with everyone.

>these legends, we can see echoes of our primal theme. The Blue Light Lotus is the ancient primal center, dislodged by a catastrophe caused by the Tibetan Sun-God Manjusri. This center is then represented, in the same spot, by a stupa, an arrangement of the elemental shapes into an "omphallos" like locator stone/tree. This same stupa/pagoda design, seen in the architecture of the original Kasthamandap, can be found throughout Buddhist Asia, from China to Burma. "The Bhagavata Purana calls the seven lower regions bila-svargas ("subterranean heavens") and they are regarded as planets or planetary systems below the earth. These regions are described as being more opulent than the upper heavenly regions of the universe. The life here is of pleasure, wealth and luxury, with no distress. The asura architect Maya has constructed palaces, temples, houses, yards and hotels for foreigners, with jewels. The natural beauty of Patala is said to surpass that of Svarga. There is no sunlight in the lower realms, but the darkness is dissipated by the shining of the jewels that the residents of Patala wear. There is no old age, no sweat, no disease in Patala."

"Patala or Nagaloka is the lowest realm and the region of the Nagas, ruled by Vasuki (the snake that hangs around Shiva's neck). Here live several Nagas with many hoods. Each of their hoods is decorated by a jewel, a source of light of which illuminates this realm"

There is obvious syncretism with European otherworld myths, sidhe etc. and Agartha/Shambhala.

"Agartha (variously spelled as Agharta, Aghartta, Agharti, among many other spellings) is a legendary kingdom that is said to be located on the inner surface of the Earth. Though the exact story varies, as there are many different versions, it is usually said to be located in Central Asia and led by a powerful figure sometimes called the King of the World, who secretly influences the surface. It is related to the belief in a hollow Earth and has been a popular subject in esotericism, occultism, and the New Age since the late 19th century."

Manjusri again.

"In the narrative, King Manjuśrīkīrti is said to have been born in 159 BC and ruled over a kingdom of 300,510 followers of the Mlechha religion, some of whom worshiped the Sun. He is said to have expelled 20,000 people from his domain who clung to Surya Samadhi (solar worship) rather than convert to Kalachakra (Wheel of Time) Buddhism. After realizing these were the wisest and best of his people and how much he was in need of them, he later asked them to return and some did. Those who did not return are said to have set up the city of Shambhala. Manjuśrīkīrti initiated the preaching of the Kalachakra teachings in order to try to convert those who returned and were still under his rule. In 59 BC he abdicated his throne to his son, Puṇḍārika, and died soon afterward, entering the Sambhogakaya of Buddhahood"

From the last thread but worth reposting for relevancy.

The sealed door of the Padmanabhaswamy Temple remains one of India's most enduring mysteries, a gateway that has resisted time, technology, and even human will. No one has opened it. No one knows for certain what lies behind it. But many believe the truth is more astonishing than anything we could imagine.

A door with no locks—and no key

Among the temple's eight known vaults, most have been opened over time. But one—known only as Chamber B—remains completely sealed. Unlike the other vaults, it has no hinges, no bolts, and no visible way to open it. It's guarded by carved images of two massive cobras, and cloaked in legend that warns of dire consequences should anyone attempt to force it open.

According to local tradition, the door was sealed in ancient times by powerful sound vibrations, using a chant that has since been lost to history. It's said that only a high-level sadhu—a spiritual ascetic—who knows the sacred Garuda Mantra can open the door. And today, no one is believed to possess the knowledge or authority to do so.

>It is believed that this gate is sealed by a Naga Bandhana or Naga Paasam — the process of tying up something valuable with a frieze of nagas, serpents of the cobra variety. It is essentially a tantrika (occult) form of worship or tantrika process, supposedly of the Atharva Veda origin. The procedure is not to be found in any written form. It is highly secretive and known only to a few Siddha Yogis (great saints) who live or once lived in Siddhashram, a secret and mystical land deep in the Himalayas.

>According to many, the Naga Bandhana are mechanisms of locks that work with the voice waves of a particular person, when it says a specific spell, which produces small vibrations that trigger these mechanisms and the door opens. It is said that if another person tries to open the door with a different spell or a different voice then the sound waves will change direction waking up the evil and causing the attack of snakes that may be nearby, or it may be ended up with terrible misfortune.

"A divine child will born"

>By this belief, the saints say that a child with such divine knowledge will be born in India who will be able to execute these sacred chants of the Mantra and thus the secret vault will be uncovered without human effort giving all the secrets and mysterious treasures that it withholds for ages.

Related, this happened years ago, near the lowest point, creeping in at the edge of my awareness was the thought the devil was down a hole, a snake hole specifically.

Time passed, as it tends to, found myself in disagreement with the ex. Think at this stage I'd spent a few days away from home and was tired, so lay down in the railway park in town and slept.

Dreamed of a snake, that we were struggling, fighting. Then the dream kicked up a level into lucidity. Was dreaming of me having a dream battle with a snake, like looking down on the initial dream from a higher perspective.

From here I could see the struggle more clearly, if snake woke first it would bite me, if I woke first I would win. Also realised it was real and woke up with a massive spasm and scream, whole body convulsed and a brown snake, around 1.3 m long, was flung off me and struck at my head in the air, missed, then slithered off underneath a nearby cafe.

Hair on my arms stood on end for the next two days, no joke scared the shit outta me, was sleeping on me, head tucked up near mine, tail curled down my leg. Now this is Australia, snakes in town are not uncommon in the north, but never heard of this, sleeping bags perhaps in urban myth.

Ever see a snake hole? After this I could and they were everywhere, stood right out, obvious. To be fair this particular area laid claim to one of the highest snake densities in Aus, and we have more of the bastards than anywhere else on Earth. But never noticed them before and there they were. Along with this came comprehension of the geas or glamour, an inclination to not look at these holes directly, the gaze wandering around the edges and mind filling in the gap, feet likewise going around but not in. Seems similar to the nagabandha, the snake binding on dimensional portals, or the same. View SameOCRGoogleiqdbSauceNAOTrace Babylon's_world_view.jpg, 137KiB, 1280x901

>Tiamat is one of the most significant figures in Babylonian mythology, often depicted as a primordial goddess associated with the saltwater ocean. Her name is synonymous with the chaotic waters that existed before the creation of the world.

>Abzu or Apsu is also the name of the fresh water in underground aquifers, which were given a religious fertilizing quality in Sumerian and Akkadian mythology. Lakes, springs, rivers, wells, and other sources of fresh water were thought to draw water from the abzu. In this regard, in Sumerian and Akkadian mythology, it referred to the primeval sea beneath the empty space of the underworld (Kur) and the earth (Ma) above.

The moon is artificial, yes, it was built.

We will be entering an euhemerist perspective, so keep in mind that we will be talking about a vast three-dimensional space, with multiple realms and star systems, not the geocentric system. We will be talking about the vast universe, within the understanding of the electrical universe, hollow celestial bodies, etc.

>Most people are fully aware that the Moon is tiny compared to the Sun, but that it is much closer to us, causing them to appear as equal discs. To be precise, the Moon is 400 times smaller than the star at the centre of our solar system, yet it is also just 1/400th of the distance between the Earth and the Sun. Whilst the surprisingly neat number of 400 for relative size and distance is apparently an amusing coincidence of the decimal counting system, the odds against this optical illusion happening at all are huge. Experts are deeply puzzled by the phenomenon. Isaac Asimov, the respected scientist and science-fiction guru, described this perfect visual alignment as being "the most unlikely coincidence imaginable." This perfect fit of the lunar and solar discs is a very human perspective because it only works from the viewpoint of someone standing on the Earth's surface. But the magic of the Moon's movements above our heads goes to even more astonishing levels. By some absolutely incomprehensible quirk of nature, the Moon also manages to precisely imitate the perceived annual movements of the Sun each month.

>The connection between human fertility and the cycles of the Moon is considered to be 'apparent rather than actual', but it isn't in the least surprising that the possibility of a relationship was noticed by our ancient ancestors. The clincher probably came when someone realized that the average gestation period of a human female, from conception to birth, is around 266 days – or nine full lunar synodic cycles. In a social and a religious sense, fertility undoubtedly played a crucial part in the lives of the people at the time the Venus of Laussel was carved. It is more or less universally accepted that female deities were important to human culture for thousands of years of prehistory. Statues of pregnant women with exaggerated genitals and breasts are common from the Palaeolithic to the Neolithic periods, and there are strong indications of the existence of a fertility-based deity who has come down to us as 'The Great Goddess'. The Venus of Laussel could quite easily be a representation of this deity, complete with a representation of the heavenly body with which she was equated – the Moon.

There was a solar incursion, probably during the Atlantean era, of the Apkallu teachers, the Bene-Elohim, Elektrozoa, the original Aryans who imparted the knowledge of sacred writing. The primordial lunar goddess is the material system itself personified, Samsara, the illusion of Maya.

>The switch from a powerful female deity, often equated with the Moon, to solar-based masculine deities seems to have taken place at about the same time humanity began to discover writing.

>NASA reports demonstrate the reaction of scientists on Earth as the Saturn V hit the lunar surface – "The Moon rang like a bell." In November 1969, the Apollo 12 crew had sent their lunar module crashing into the Moon following their return to the command craft after their lunar landing mission. That lunar module had struck with a force of one tonne of TNT, causing the shock waves to build up to a peak in eight minutes and then continue for nearly an hour. The seismic signals produced by the impact from Apollo 13 were twenty to thirty times greater and lasted four times longer than those resulting from the earlier LM crash. This time, peak intensity occurred after seven minutes, and the reverberations lasted for three hours and twenty minutes, travelling to a depth of twenty-five miles. This led to the conclusion that the Moon has an unusually light core or possibly no core at all.

>At the time, Houston remarked to the Apollo 13 crew: "By the way, Aquarius, we see the results now from 12's seismometer. Looks like your booster just hit the Moon, and it's rocking a little bit." NASA reports how the information from these two artificial moonquakes led to a reconsideration of theories proposed about the lunar interior. Among the puzzling features, they say, are the rapid build-up to the peak and the prolonged reverberations, because nothing comparable happens when objects strike Earth.

>Whilst it is true that the extreme polar regions of the Earth are frozen throughout the year, the tilt angle of 22.5 degrees ensures that most parts of the Earth's surface get a fair share of warmth throughout each year. This, in turn, means that by far the vast majority of water on the surface of the planet remains in a liquid state. All of life is utterly dependent on water and cannot exist without it. The band of temperatures at which water is liquid is really very narrow. The oceans of the Earth would freeze at around 1.91°C, with boiling point occurring at 100°C. The Earth is therefore extremely well balanced. The coldest temperature ever recorded was -89.2°C (-128.6°F) at the Vostok Station in Antarctica and the highest was 58°C (136°F) at El Azizia in Libya. That is a range of absolute extremes of less than 148°C, which is very little indeed in terms of the entire spectrum. The coldest anything can get is known as 'absolute zero' when all molecular motion stops. This occurs at a rather chilly -273.15°C (-459.67°F). On the other hand, there is no known upper limit for temperature but the hottest temperature in our solar system is the Sun's core, which comes in at an impressive 15,000,000°C (27,000,000°F).

The book I'm citing is written by a physicalist author who accepts evolutionary interpretations and much of the historiography, stratigraphy, etc. Logically, it's distorted and contaminated by materialist subversion, however, he is correct in identifying that this solar system underwent planetary engineering, something we will observe in the book Saturn Death Cult (not by intelligence, but by natural causes) and in Ringmakers of Saturn... The mistake of those who speak of the theory of the electric universe where our system was captured by the sun is believing that it was purely a natural process; it wasn't. There was a race of forerunners who built this system; Christopher Knight calls them UCA.

>The UCA realized that it needed to draw further attention to the artificial nature of the regulator by building on a truly fundamental number that represented the planet. The number that was chosen was the planet's spin rate per orbit of the star, which would have to be instantly recognizable as a value that was unique to the planet – a natural PIN (personal identification number) for an entire world. So, in this case, it was a Planetary Identification Number that was required. At the required time window, the planet would be rotating at a rate of 366 revolutions for each orbit around its mother star, and the use of the number value 366 would therefore be easily spotted as the Planetary Identification Number.

>The intelligent creatures would recognize the PIN number from an early date, as it requires only very basic astronomy to appreciate that this three-digit number is the most fundamental of all numbers that are unique to the planet. Surely these Earth-dwelling creatures would be very surprised when they calculated the relative size of their planet to the orbiting regulator and discovered that the one is 366 per cent larger than the other. The regulator was also engineered with a PIN number that was meaningful to the intended intelligent creatures. That number would be the reciprocal of the planet's PIN number – the mirror image of 366. The mathematics was simplicity itself. The regulator's PIN number would be arrived at by considering its size as 100 per cent and dividing it by the relative size of the planet, namely 366 per cent. Working to five decimal places, the result is: $100/366 = 0.27322$

The regulator was then carefully engineered so that at the key point in time it would be orbiting the planet at a rate of once every 27.322 planetary days.

The apparent impossibility of the Neolithic inhabitants having had the skills to develop such a marvellous system is now resolved when we introduce the unknown creative agency because, if it started with knowledge of the dimensions of the two original bodies (the Sun and the Earth), it could have engineered the Moon to make it fit the same rules. Our hypothesis was, therefore, to assume that the UCA somehow instructed the Stone-Age builders to adopt the system we call Megalithic geometry.

Herein lies Knight's biggest problem... He doesn't have access to the information we already have in this thread....

>We cannot hide from the problem that, if our deductions are accurate, our unidentified creative agency has had contact with us at least once over the last 6,000 years. If this agency wished humans to know what they had done – and they (or it) are capable of making contact so recently – then why don't they just turn up right now and tell us what was done in the distant past, instead of leaving messages on the Moon?

Firstly, the matter of the Forerunners, teachers, watchers, is not physicalist; the world has passed from higher states to more material falls, this is verified in various currents; we are densified, coagulated. History is not linear and progressive, evolution is a scientific myth, and historiography and chronology themselves are completely distorted.

That said, the ancient gods that have reached us through distorted records are a deliberate confusion of the good teachers and Aryan ancestors and the demons who need to keep man and the world in this densified state to subsist.

Those who built the Moon are the second option... The Moon is part of the Moon-Saturn system to cycle the divine human spirit and coagulate the divine light/breath in the three-dimensional material world.

The image is a diagram illustrating the concept of a virtual instrument system. At the top, there is a yellow arrow pointing to the left, which suggests the connection to a computer. Below this, there is a red arrow pointing to the right, indicating the connection to a virtual instrument. The text "SATURN" is written in red, and below it, "TIME CUBE" is written in yellow, suggesting a connection to a virtual instrument.

The diagram also includes a graphic of a computer, a planet (possibly Saturn), a moon, and a sun, which are all connected by lines. The text "COMMUNICATIONS INTERFACE MODULE" is written in black, and below it, "POWER SUPPLY" is written in yellow, indicating the connection to a power supply.

The bottom of the diagram shows a graphic of Earth, with a yellow arrow pointing to the left, suggesting the connection to a power supply. The text "POWER SUPPLY" is written in yellow, and below it, "EARTH" is written in black, indicating the connection to Earth.

The overall style of the image is informational and educational, likely intended for a science or technology-related audience. The use of color and the positioning of the objects suggest a flow of information from the computer to the virtual instrument, and then to Earth.

The Moon is literally, in both models of existence (geocentric and heliocentric), the fluidic mirror where the "simulation" of the matrix is projected onto the earth, from the computational "calculations" of destiny woven in Saturn. Or vice versa, where it is rendered on the imaginal fluidic plane on the moon and then projected onto Saturn, written in destiny, then descends to earth, "calcifying" samsara.

Let's now look at the book Ringmakers of Saturn.

This book is macabre, and you'll see why...

>Near the end of the 18th century, luminous points were observed on the edge of the ring plane (of saturn). One of these is reported to have moved off its position. None of the luminous points persisted very long (less than 16 hours), thereby negating the possibility of their being satellites. The observer, William Herschel, postulated in 1789 that some sort of unstable source must be responsible, such as an intense fire. Another puzzlement has been the sighting of one arm of the ring when the other arm could not be detected.

>Luminous points continued to be reported by discriminating observers into the 19th century. Again, satellites of Saturn had to be ruled out as none could be located in the vicinity. The most astounding and now famous observations of a light source came in the 20th century on 9 February 1917. Two astronomers, Maurice Ainslie and John Knight of Great Britain, observed the source independently. Brightness of the source was so intense that Ainslie referred to the object as a "star". The star traveled a straight-line course which, in effect, subtended a chord across the ring system. Length of the chord was of the order of 125,000 km (77,700 mi). Observed time to traverse this chordal distance across the ring system was 1 hour and 40 minutes, making the average velocity 21 km/sec (13 mi/sec). This value compares with an average velocity for Voyager en route to Saturn of about 13.7 km/sec (8.5 mi/sec). That is, the star was about 1½ times faster. During the observations when the star was in plain view, the light therefrom appeared to be elongated. There was a strange aspect about the traversal itself. Seeming to move through the ring plane without difficulty, the star appeared to devour material ahead as it proceeded. Further, at no time did the rings completely block out the radiating light.

The image is a photograph of a section of a human eye, with a focus on the retina and the sclera. The retina is labeled with the words "assimi Division" and "Enke Division," indicating the two divisions of the retina. The sclera is labeled with "A-Ring" and "Fan," which likely refer to the outer and inner layers of the sclera, respectively. The image is dark, with a focus on the central part of the eye, which is the retina. The background is blurred, emphasizing the details of the eye.

>Plate 7 shows the formation of the Encke division. In the plate, the A and B rings as well as the Cassini division can be recognized. Once again, a vehicle is found depositing an orbital trail. Efflux emanating primarily from the radially outboard ⅔ of body length is responsible. Clearly, were the vehicle located at a slightly shorter radius, the gap would be lessened. Widths reported for the Encke division range from approximately 200 to 320 km (125 to 200 mi). Nominally, this gap width is equivalent to a variation in orbital radius of only about ¼ of one percent. The implication is that the orbital radius of the vehicle's position is set very precisely in order to produce a gap.

Inspection of the vehicle reveals numerous jets issuing from many different positions around and along the body. A fan of three jets appears to form the inboard part of the trailing efflux. Each jet appears to consist of a series of bulbous swellings. Such swellings are indicative of the form of electrically charged flows known as pinched plasmas. The length of the vehicle appears to be about 10 times its diameter. A dark jet crossing the body near the left end makes the vehicle appear as though there are two sections aligned longitudinally. In reality, the vehicle is integrally one. An attempt at sizing yields an apparent length of about 4,700 km (2,900 mi) and a diameter of 470 km (290 mi). Diameters of issuing jets are of the order of 0.1 to 0.2 body diameter, or about 47 to 94 km (29 to 58 mi).

>Saturn investigations for years have portrayed the ring system as comprised of primordial matter. The utter idea that the rings might be quite young is uncomfortable to primordial advocates because a key assumption is placed in jeopardy. Previous chapters have pictured several different electromagnetic vehicles actually depositing the A and B rings. These fortuitous pictures say not only that the ring material is quite new, but also that continuous regeneration can occur. Conversely, ring extinction by vaporization is a realistic possibility. Vaporization could result consequentially from the immense, high-temperature, luminous, mobile forms which can be generated. Exemplary forms are a fireball larger than Earth's moon (Plate 6) and a lightning stroke almost as long as the State of California. Yet still, these displays of power are fairly modest.

>One of the most massive displays of power is a large-scale disruption in Saturn's rings extending across the entire ring system. Hence, the phenomenon likely is aperiodic and of fairly brief duration – perhaps days, or even hours. In addition to the multicolored band, very narrow parallel markings can be seen extending chordwise across the rings in several locations. Further, two luminous sources appear in the right-hand sector of the rings. is the completely filled Cassini gap. Usually, this gap appears mostly as empty space. An astounding 218,000 km (136,000 mi) is spanned by the colorful band, roughly the equivalent of 17 Earth diameters. Thus, the affected region exceeds the total surface of the Earth, which is about 510 million square kilometers (197 million square miles). Obviously, a disturbance of such great magnitude requires immensely enormous energy. Insight concerning the physical situation in and near the discontinuity band is provided by subsequent plates presenting enlargements embracing localities at points labeled 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5.

>Evidence is 100 percent positive that propulsive vehicles generate the inner- and outer-Enke A rings of Saturn.

>A cylindrical body, (1), emits a faint axial exhaust flame, (2), of probable extremely high temperature. The diameter of the exhaust orifice is about 1/2 body diameter. Aft of the nose, about a body-diameter distant, is located a bilateral projection, (3). This projection might be likened to wings on an airplane. Below the projection is positioned a lengthy bank of underbody emissions or flame jets, (4). In frontal view, these jets would extend radially outward from beneath the body at a probable angle of about 45 degrees. Immersed in, but extending out of, the flame bank is a tightly entwined tongue, (5). The length of the tongue is at least 2 body diameters and has the capability within itself to project emissions or plumes. Atop the body nose, just aft of the axial exhaust flame, a bulbar pinched streamer, (6), flows upward and aft. Other streamers, (7) and (8), also flow aft. Streamer (8) starts at the body, but streamer (7) commences from a lateral projection. Streamer (6) shows an ability to branch directly forward. At the nose, ahead of the foreground lateral projection, a small jet (9) is emitted, which jumps or "shorts" to the projection. This phenomenon illustrates the presence of different electrical potential (voltage) levels and demonstrates the mechanism that governs flow paths. Also in this same vicinity, numerous small radial emissions occur around the exhaust cowl. The hub labeled (10) acts as a collector to coalesce beginning streamers. Coalescence forms an embryonic streamer which ultimately bursts forth. In this chapter, cylindrical propulsive bodies of approximate fineness ratio 13 have been pictured with lengths ranging from 1 to 4 Earth diameters.

The image is a close-up photograph of a celestial object, which appears to be a planet or moon, with a textured surface. The object is surrounded by a dark background, which contrasts with the object's surface. The surface of the object has a rough, uneven texture, with some areas appearing darker and more rugged than others.

There are several lines and markings on the surface of the object, which could be interpreted as lines of latitude and longitude, indicating the position of the object in the sky. These lines are drawn in a grid-like pattern, with numbers and symbols indicating the latitude and longitude.

In the upper right corner of the image, there is a small, circular object with a textured surface, resembling a piece of jewelry or a small figurine. The object is attached to a wooden stick, which extends upwards and outwards, suggesting it might be a part of a larger structure or decoration.

The image is labeled with numbers and symbols, which are likely to represent specific features or attributes of the celestial object. However, without additional context or knowledge of the language used in the labels, it is not possible to determine the exact meaning of these numbers and symbols.

Overall, the image provides a detailed view of a celestial object, with a focus on its texture and the markings that indicate its position in the sky. The presence of the jewelry-like object and the wooden stick suggests that the image may be part of a larger display or exhibit.

Dione and Iapetus both have been subjected to the burning fury of visitation from an electromagnetic vehicle. Each has experienced topographical structuring caused by various emissions which these high-potential units possess. In the case of Iapetus, structuring can be deduced to be much more than a surface phenomenon. In being subjected to the observed electro-potential field, electrical currents enter Iapetus, converge within the interior, then exit. Surface-distributed entry currents combine to reach a large magnitude near the center. Simultaneously, a situation also is created whereby extraneous material is shed at the surface as current shafts enter the satellite.

This latter situation is supported by photographic observations of dark material on the periphery of Iapetus where current paths have been found to enter. Besides deposits, visitations are evidenced by a wide assortment of surface scars. Most familiar are craters of widely ranging diameters. Other scars are in the form of rills, ridges, and thermo-set areas having surfaces of indistinct features. Dione exhibits mostly distinct craters, rills, and ridges, whereas Iapetus displays a dimpled surface with indistinct features. Differences can be attributed to the particular vehicle component creating the scar and the amount of attendant heating. For a given electromagnetic vehicle, the maximum diameter for a round scar (e.g., a crater) would be a size approximating the vehicle body diameter. Because these spacecraft have long-range cruise capability, any solar-system body becomes a suspect candidate for having experienced visitations.

>Ancient lunar presence of an electromagnetic vehicle at Mare Orientale can resolve other perplexities concerning the moon. Discovery that the unorthodox sectorial illumination of Iapetus is attributable directly to the presence of an encompassing electro-potential field leads to a tentative conclusion about the long-extinct lunar magnetic field. Specifically, the conclusion is reached that the moon has, at some time, experienced the same treatment as Iapetus. According to Plates 44 and 45, an identifiable time at which the moon has undergone magnetizing influences is from an electromagnetic vehicle while forming Mare Orientale. That electromagnetic vehicles are connected anciently to lunar formations distinctly opens a strong possibility of a past intimacy with Earth. Implications to this effect already have been signaled by terrestrial rocks which date back to about the same birth date as Mare Orientale. A lunar connection with electromagnetic vehicles neither abrogates nor conflicts with data obtained from moon-orbiter missions and landing excursions. This integral posture is much more substantial than concepts which explain prehistoric data only for narrow circumstances.

>Presence of electromagnetic vehicles (E.M.V.'s) in the outer solar system forces attention on an extraordinary potential hazard of manned space flight not considered heretofore. E.M.V.'s can be expected to pose an extreme hazard to manned space flight in the vicinity of Saturn and Uranus, and probably even as near to Earth as Mars. Some pictures of Mars suggest visitations by E.M.V.'s. However, known presence of E.M.V.'s serves a substantial warning to space travelers at least to stay their distance. Failure to heed this warning could result in catastrophe and emotional unpleasantness much worse than that which resulted from the explosion of space-shuttle Challenger.

If the builders of the Moon are evil, and the solar gods that came later are a deliberate confusion, who remains?

The answer lies in what we call the "good instructors and aryan ancestors." They would be neither "lunar" nor "solar" in the later, corrupted sense of these terms. They would belong to a prior and superior order, perhaps associated with a pre-lunar and pre-material state of consciousness (the "Pelasgians" and "Proselenes" of legend).

Their symbol, therefore, would not be the Sun or the Moon of our current sky (which are pieces of the machine), but something like:

>The "Black Light" or "Black Sun" (a spiritual, non-physical sun).

>The "Polar Star" (a fixed axis outside the system of cycles).

>The "Void" or "The Source" prior to the creation of the material Matrix.

In the sky of this simulation, solar archetypes are presented as the "good" alternative to the "evil" lunar ones. But the true exit, according to the text's radical cosmology, lies in rejecting the entire artificial sky and seeking the origin that is prior and external to it.

>Consequently, sacred alphabets are not mere vehicles for writing, but systems of vibrational engineering. Each rune or Sanskrit syllable functions as a glyph of resonance, a key intended to actuate specific forces within the fabric of reality. The myth of Odin discovering the runes while suspended from the World Tree, or the Rishis 'hearing' the Vedas in deep meditation, describes a contact with this supra-human intelligence, a download of a symbolic operating system. The confusion of tongues, recounted in the myth of Babel, signifies not a divine punishment, but the deliberate fragmentation of this unified system to prevent access to the 'source code' of creation. The various sacred alphabets, Futhark, Sanskrit, Ogham, etc, are the surviving lineages of this original Adamantine Language. Therefore, the ultimate purpose of the initiate is not merely to study these symbols, but to reassemble the fragments and reactivate their function, thereby resynchronizing with the cosmic transmitters from whom this knowledge first emanated.

Many high level meditators say the powers just don't function anymore, often pointing towards collective disbelief as culpable. Self-discipline orsamadhi are proven failures en-masse, although likely components, something else is missing. Herbs and incantations are lost. Yet there is still the rare anomaly, the odd story or experience that disagrees with the materialist interpretation, knows magic still exists beneath the obscuration.

If this source code is a deep universal truth, being delusional and impure may preclude finding such, especially if gate kept by supernatural beings. Perhaps the breath will never circulate properly whilst living a lie, a hard task in these days of deception, but not impossible.

Buddha was said to have used metta up to the forth jhana, then followed the threefold path, which just seems to exclude some of the other powers mentioned in their doctrine, but requires the same process.

>The second way is the way the Buddha's own awakening process unfolded. He went to the fourth jhāna and then: (1) he remembered his past lives; (2) he visited other realms and saw how and why beings were reborn there; and finally, (3) he saw how kamma works, how causes create more causes, in a never ending wheel that leads to old age and death. Disenchantment and dispassion arose through this knowledge, and Nibbāna was attained. This way is called the "threefold knowledge" or tevijja. That is (1) knowledge of past lives, (2) knowledge of beings in other realms, and (3) knowledge of the destruction of the taints — Nibbāna.

It is a manual condensing and systematizing the 5th century understanding and interpretation of the Buddhist path as maintained by the elders of the Mahavihara Monastery in Anuradhapura, Sri Lanka.

Kasina meditation is a concentration meditation (variously known in different traditions as samatha, dhyana, or jhana meditations), intended to settle the mind of the practitioner and create a foundation for further practices of meditation. In the early stages of kasina meditation, a physical object is used as the object of meditation, being focused upon by the practitioner until an eidetic (after-image) image of the object forms in the practitioners mind. In more advanced levels of kasina meditation, only a mental image of the kasina is used as an object of meditation.

The image features a donkey with a brown coat and a white face, looking directly at the viewer. The donkey's ears are erect, and its eyes are wide open. The background is a solid teal color, providing a contrast to the donkey's brown coat. In the foreground, there is a laptop computer with a silver body and a black screen. The laptop is positioned to the left of the donkey. The image is a digital photograph with a focus on the donkey and the laptop, and there are no visible texts or other discernible objects in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a clear focus on the donkey and the laptop, and the composition is balanced.

This is the fire kasina, it both fascinates and disturbs me. Psychedelic and otherworldly. Just stare at a candle for a few min, then close eyes and look at the afterimage. After a while a bright red glowing dot appears when eyes are closed, which you then take as object, then progresses to visions, sometimes actual entities. Never got past five days so far before having to stop, shit is wild.

Mantra

>In the Pāñcarātra tradition "A mantra is a manifestation of god or one of his aspects, and has two forms, the visual and the linguistic form. Since it is a manifestation of god, or his consort, limbs, attendant, weapon etc. it is also a manifestation of his or her divine power. E. g. the basic mantra (mūlamantra) of the Jayākhyasaṃhitā represents Viṣṇu with his various attributes and as different avatāras of himself. By visualizing or reciting the mantra in specific rituals, the practitioner can control the divine power for both the purpose of liberation (mukti) and to attain worldly pleasures (bhukti), including supernatural powers. The mantras were secret and given by the gurus after initiation, and are only incorporated in the Saṃhitās via codes.

>The ritual of worshipping the mantra starts with the mantranyāsa, in which the sādḥaka ritually applies mantras to different parts of his body, presumably after the ritual bath (snāsa) and the purification of the elements (bhūtaśuddhi). In this way he gets a mantra body, and by being similar to the mantra he is deemed fit to worship it. After this the mantra is worshipped first mentally and then externally with the help of a maṇḍala onto which the mantra is imposed.

>Because of the many repetitions of reciting, visualizing and giving oblations to the mantra made over time by the sādḥaka "the mantra is forced to appear in front of the sādḥaka [...] to admit that it has been mastered by him, and will be at his disposal from this time on". The manner of appearance is different for each mantra, but similar to all of them is that the sādḥaka now has mastered the mantra and is able to use its powers as he pleases, as he has achieved the mantrasiddhi. In Rastelli's words, this means he will "be able to do whatever he desires from this time on".

>Here the moment has come to pass to the main point of our considerations, precisely in relation to the swastika not only as a fire symbol, but also as a polar symbol. From the most diverse testimonies it appears that the solar function embodied by the leaders of the great tradition-rooted cultures was compared to that of a pole. The leader represented the constancy, the immovable point, around which the ordered movement of the forces takes place, which circle him hierarchically graded as rex (rex from regere).

>Here it is about the deeper meaning of the Far Eastern term: "immutability in the middle", to be connected with the words of Confucius: "The one who rules by means of virtue (virtus) (the celestial one, born of immutability in the middle) is like the polar star. He stands firmly on his place, but all the stars revolve around him". Incidentally, the Aristotelian concept of the "immovable mover" is a theological translation of the same conception - to be found again in the designation expressing in Sanskrit the function of the "lord of the world", the cakrawartî. Cakravartî means "the one who makes the wheel turn", the wheel of the regnum, in that he appears as the immovable point, the "pole", which forms the center and support for its regulated movement.

>In a deeper sense, however, there is also a relationship here to what might be called Olympic superiority. The "polar" symbol is that of an irresistible force in its serene superiority, of a perfectly controlled power from above, which legitimizes itself, as it were, by its very presence; which brings about the unmediated and threatening experience of something transcendent: an appearance of the permanence of the "world of being" or superworld, which was often itself represented by a fire symbol.

The forehead of the sky, earth's centre, Agni became the messenger of earth and heaven.

Vaiśvānara, the Deities produced thee, a God, to be a light unto the Ārya."(1)

"We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake. 'For whom the Maker, Ahura Mazda, has built up a dwelling on the Hara Berezaiti, the bright mountain around which the many (stars) revolve, where come neither night nor darkness, no cold wind and no hot wind, no deathful sickness, no uncleanness made by the Daevas, and the clouds cannot reach up unto the Haraiti Bareza.

A dwelling that all the Amesha-Spentas, in one accord with the sun, made for him in the fullness of faith of a devoted heart, and he surveys the whole of the material world from the Haraiti Bareza."(2)

"Perhaps this is why the Swastika, a symbol of "good fortune," is the "wheel of Mithra" (gardâne-ye Mehr). It is the handle he uses to move the heavens. The celestial bears or Arktoi (singular Arktos) are the symbol and instrument of the kosmokrator at the pole. According to classical thought, the fixed stars rotated around the fixed polar axis, beginning with "the shining Bears" (Arktoi or Ursa Major and Ursa Minor). In works such as Aristotle's On the Heavens this stability is taken to be a symbol of the eternal perfection of the Unmoved Mover. Cicero, Manilius, and Aratos all agree."(3)

The image is a screenshot of a Twitter post by Anthony Olivier, who is identified as "@AnthonyOliviera". The post is a humorous commentary on a historical event, specifically the crucifixion of Jesus Christ. The text is in English and is divided into two columns.

The left column is a photograph of a wall with a cross and a figure of Jesus Christ. The figure is depicted with a donkey-headed figure and is wearing a robe with the word "Jesus" written on it. The wall has a rough texture and is covered in graffiti, with the graffiti reading "NO NO NO JEW GOD NOW!" and "THAT'S YOU LOL".

The right column is a cartoon drawing of a character with a wolf-like appearance, wearing a red and gold sash with a star on it. The character is holding a cross and is depicted with a figure of Jesus Christ, who is also wearing a robe with the word "Jesus" written on it. The character is also holding a figure of a donkey-headed figure with a cross on it. The text in the right column reads "NO NO NO JEW GOD NOW!" and "THAT'S YOU LOL".

The overall tone of the image is humorous and satirical, with the character's actions and expressions suggesting a playful and exaggerated interpretation of the historical event.

Thought this was interesting, the Barbury Castle crop circle has Vishnu symbology. The cakravati is considered his avatar.

>Each of the four attributes of Vishnu has a symbolic meaning associated with it. The irresistible Sudarshana Chakra is the weapon wielded by Vishnu and it signifies the destruction of one's ego, burning away of spiritual ignorance and illusion, and developing the vision to realize god. From the Conch Shell emanates the primordial sound of creation "AUM", which pervades the entire cosmos. The vibration of AUM is the original sound that contains all other sounds, all words and all languages. It is considered to be the supreme object of meditation and is uttered before all Vedic mantras. The Mace held by Vishnu denotes his power to destroy the materialistic or demonic tendencies within us.

>At the bottom right corner of the formation, we find a six-spoked circle which can be identified as the six-spoked Sudarshana Chakra, the famous discus wielded by Vishnu. At the top of the formation we find a "Circle with a stick attached to" which could very well be the cross-section of the Mace, the other attribute associated with Vishnu. Each of these individual symbols are interconnected by straight lines, thereby forming an extraordinary two-dimensional representation of Vishnu, along with his four attributes.

>Is it possible, therefore, that the crop circles, which are essentially circular in form, and thereby resemble a chakra or a wheel, are heralding the birth of another chakravartin - the savior whose coming is widely anticipated by the people across the world?

The text mentioned is unverified and traces to the Thule Temple website, Pontolillo does quote it though, and it sounds cool.

>The earliest surviving example of the concept of the Black Sun is found among the Sumerians in the 3rd millennium BCE during the reign of Sargon I (23rd-22nd centuries BCE). A text known as the U-Ishtar from this time period speaks of the Black Sun: ...the god Bab-Chomet placed in the new universe The Black Sun, which no one can see with earthly eyes. It is the source of god's power in this world; Around them is all. Thus the world age was determined (Ettl, 1991, Chapter 19.12, p. 59).

>The Black Sun also appears on a stone carving of the grandson of Sargon I, the king Naram-Sin. There, the Midnight Mountain is depicted with a figure wearing a horned helmet and two suns above the mountain. The Sumerian culture was inherited by the Babylonians. The Black Sun is also mentioned in two Babylonian inscriptions:

At the top of the world stands the Midnight Mountain.

Its Light is eternal.

The eyes of man cannot see it — and yet it is there.

Over the Midnight Mountain stream the rays of the Black Sun.

The eyes of man cannot see them — and yet they are there.

Inside us burns its Light.

Only the brave and righteous still have within them the God-head. (The Black Sun Unveiled, Pontolillo 673).

"The hero presents himself face to face with death. He knows he can not cede and that the power of his virile will, his Shaivite first principle, depends on crossing the void without disintegrating.

This is the emptiness that lies beyond the ultimate chakra. A leap into the void through a Black Sun, a Black Hole where the light of the Golden Sun (the one of this material world) dies.

Beyond the Black Sun the hero reaches the Green Thunderbolt. There his nature transmutes into the body of vajra, an immortal red material, hard as diamonds, resurrecting as a divine being.

He is Wotan (Odin) crucified for nine nights on the Tree of Terror, Iggdrasil, (or the Irminsul). The Germanic God is delivered to a shamanic test in which he must pierce through the boundaries of death, arriving in the other world, the world of the Gods from which he recovers the runes, the lost power. From thenceforth he is a true Ehrean, a Lord of the Two Worlds."

In trying to work out a practice, how necessary is avoiding dissolution? (Remember it being mentioned). Seems ego dissolution destroys the animal nature, fine if you want to be a mountain hermit or a monastic, a sage hippy, but what if you want to bring the sword. The kasina path stops at high forth jhana and refines this level, maybe there is a way of strengthening the "mind made body" here, then practice Sufi black light method and cross the void intact.

>When justice is crushed, when evil rules supreme, then I come. For the protection of the good, for the destruction of the evil-doers, for the sake of firmly establishing righteousness, I am born in age after age.

>Quetzalcoatl/Kukulcan/Viracocha was called Votan in Palenque, which is the same as the Norse Wotan or Odin. Both are described as bearded wisdom bringers and sun worshippers. Were they the same person?

>They were all described as very kind people, very compassionate and empathetic, mad at the sight of suffering, forbidding and abhorring intra-ethnic violence and promoting peace, enlightenment, and cooperative ethnic living (Some kind of proto-natsoc). Ever since the fall of sun worship, people have become less kind, more violent, more ignorant, more selfish, more jewish, more christcuck, more boomer. This cannot be a coincidence.

>The religion of the Hyperboreans and Atlanteans was sun worship. They were all described as extraordinary and excellent people, very peaceful (but justice-driven), very wise (and rational), very harmonious (space, solitude, and nature) and very cooperative and meritocratic. Not like white people today who act in any way except White.

Remember that Emperor Julian was a Pagan Neoplatonist who decided that Helios would be the godhead in his religion, which was intended to challenge judeochristianity. Julian's decision to elevate Helios wasn't arbitrary; it was based on historical accounts in Paganism.

The image depicts a regal crown with a central diamond-encrusted gemstone, which is the focal point of the piece. The crown is adorned with a deep purple velvet fabric that is embellished with numerous small, sparkling diamonds and other gemstones. The crown's design includes a large, ornate, and intricately detailed base, which is supported by a series of smaller, more delicate elements. The crown is set against a plain, light-colored background, which accentuates its luxurious and regal appearance. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the crown's detailed craftsmanship and the sparkling gemstones. There are no visible texts or inscriptions within the image.

Will add the last section due to a certain sense of inevitability and symmetry, with the first two parts already done. Of course I don't expect anyone to believe it who doesn't have the requisite experiential factor in the otherworldly, and even then likely not in most cases.

Now to the captured diamond Kohinoor, which is a very large diamond with a rather bloody and mythic history, taken from India by the British Empire and kept in the Tower, then placed in the Queen mother's crown. Also Kohinur is a hall in this case, with a party scheduled later, but first I'll have to backtrack, getting ahead of myself.

Mentioned the bad place I got myself into with the astral demon hunting obsession, took almost as long getting out as it did going in, haven't associated with any of these people for a long time and am generally free of vice, never committed any unpardonable sin back then by some miracle, never broke, almost died a lot.

So if you recall the devil hunting mission, which had multiplied to also include the masons and jewish bankers at this stage, a more normal inclination really, everyone hates those cunts, anyway it was becoming more urgent, like it was all coming to a head. Consider the other (linked) post with the sleeping snake and resulting ability to see glamourised snake holes, and a now strong feeling the demiurge, or source of all evil, was down a snake hole and I was going to find it. Obviously not a logical occurrence, not sherlocked powers of deduction, intuition.

Caught up and back on track, heading to party, queen of diamonds, Kohinur.

Let's set the stage, back then I was at the peak of my physical ability, mean, a professional fighter. My companions were of course demons, because that's where my energy lay at the time, deep in the pit. First we have the handler, always manipulating in the background. Older, a killer, hitman and torturer now semi retired, lucid in the astral realm via an "angel" who gave him the choice of life or death as a child, when he lay beaten, raped, and dying from his own fathers assault. He described the "angel" as being a black portal at night he went through to the astral realm.

Younger brother of the handler, false light to my apparent darkness, had just got out of jail for pulling out someone's eye, not sure if he'd killed anyone yet, claimed not but looked forward to it. Sometimes named himself Vissago. Charismatic, easy to be around and got along with everyone, liked me because I am a weapon. Add in a Maori bloke, my shit ex, and couple of extras and that's it.

Handler pulls me aside before we go and says to be careful tonight, which was strange because said nothing remotely like that before and dngaf anyway. Mentioned not even he could tell what was down the hole, and it freaked him out, he knew I knew he had a demon in him, we'd discussed it. Asked which hole and he replied hells hole, which is an actual place further down the same road (a waterfall) out in the forest, but not there, confusing I know.

Party, we are drugged up, MDMA and acid, but get there and instantly a feeling like that dance party in the original Blade movie hits, of vampires, we all give each other that look like are you seeing this?

Head back outside to the cars and hang out there, I played chicken with a car, Maori guy pulls this massive floating capoeira styled jump kick, says he feels like light. Dragons come and dance in the sky, all four of us can see them, three of us had seen them before. Black and massive, filling the space between the stars, looking down.

Went down to the building where the party was, around the back to a space on the edge of the forest, listened to the music, smoked weed, drank, dropped a pill that was rumoured to be strong. Time passed, as it does. Sometimes I used to walk off into the forest alone with no light at bush parties.

The moon was out and bright, went into the forest for a bit and came to really long snakey grass, which is an Aussie thing, grass you don't want to walk in because it has a snake in it. Of course there is varying degrees depending on how scared you are of them, to mum any grass is snake grass. Anyway its fuckin snake grass and I get a gate guardian feeling, hear a possible snake noise in the grass and I'm certain there is one in there.

Went straight at it, nothing happened, then a sense of a snake hole and being steered right so I continued left and came out into a clearing. Dead center of this clearing was a large hole, around 10m diameter. Approached with little to no caution, stood and looked down, mind began to bend in comprehension, I knew what it was, holy shit its the devils hole.

So called laws of physics bent here. On flat ground, imagine a 10m circle with a spiral track 1m wide layed out on it, you get four winds and a 1m terminus. This was layed out like that but going down, each wind resting closer into the center than the last, but the spiral never closed.

It was apparently endlessly deep with a clear hole in the middle about 4m across that never changed size. Each level dropped like a 5ft step to the next level, but the hole never closed. Light was dim but I could see down hundreds of meters. It was a physically impossible shape in 3D space.

You may well think at this point well he was juiced to gills and hallucinating, I didn't because I never hallucinate on acid, only once on this weird weed, anyhow did think it so momentous that confirmation was needed. Went back and got the ex and handlers brother. Said nothing but dragged them into the forest, they knew something was up.

Got back to the clearing and showed them the hole, asked if they could see it, they could and confirmed the spatial anomaly, also looked pretty freaked out. Then I walked down the snake hole intent on killing him, no thought not to, none. Think I made it half a turn down, to the other side of the thing, before they started frantically yelling at me "nooo ... come back", "wtf are you doing" etc. so I did and that was that.

Decent description of the signs that appear in breathing practice. Aiming to include breath shamatha at around 1/3 of kasina practice time, with the aim of reaching higher levels at similar rate. There is also an air kasina, so the two should hopefully cover the 72 potential defects in this key element.

>In the phases of mindfulness of breathing thus far, you have been attending in various ways to the tactile sensations of the respiration. However, to continue all the way along the path of shamatha, eventually you must shift your attention from the tactile sensations of breathing to an “acquired sign” (Pali: uggaha-nimitta), a symbol of the air element that appears before the mind’s eye as you progress in shamatha practice. To different people, acquired signs associated with the breath practice may appear like a star, a cluster of gems or pearls, a wreath of flowers, a puff of smoke, a cobweb, a cloud, a lotus flower, a wheel, or the moon or sun. The various appearances of the acquired sign are related to the mental dispositions of individual meditators. If you wish to continue on the path of mindfulness of breathing—which here explicitly turns into “mindfulness with breathing”—as soon as such a sign arises, shift your attention to this sign. This will be your object of attention as you proceed along the rest of the nine stages leading to shamatha.

>The Theravada tradition gives this specific description of achieving shamatha by way of mindfulness of the respiration: You begin this practice, as described earlier, by focusing on the tactile sensations of the breath, which are the “sign” for preliminary practice (parikamma-nimitta). Eventually you shift your attention to the acquired sign (uggaha-nimitta) of the breath, which becomes your meditative object until you achieve shamatha, at which point a third sign appears spontaneously. This is called the counterpart sign (patibhaga-nimitta) of the breath, which is a subtle, emblematic representation of the whole quality of the air element.

>Buddhaghosa described this sign as follows: The counterpart sign appears as if breaking out from the acquired sign, and a hundred times a thousand times more purified, like a looking-glass disk drawn from its case, like a mother-of-pearl dish well washed, like the moon’s disk coming out from behind a cloud, like cranes against a thunder cloud. But it has neither color nor shape...it is born only in the perception in one who has obtained concentration, being a mere model of appearance.

Continue until metta reaches high 4th jhana, rough duration 1 month.

Stage #2

1/3 Breath shamatha, 2/3 Kasina (supernatural powers edition), auxiliary metta

Continue until breath is stabilized in the second sign, and all eight kasinas are at 4th jhana with all 14 variations listed in "The Path of Purification" achieved. Rough duration 6 - 12 months.

Stage #3

Investigate other realms and past lives for "source code", with partial focus on discovering method to cross the void ego intact.

Duration unknown

Stage #4

Sufi black light practice, hamsa/nada

Duration unknown.

Will test it out and give progress reports, see if I can get measurable and/or observable supernatural results, either works or doesn't, we shall see, quietly confident of reaching votan hippy tier.

Acoustic levitation.

>Abul Hasan Ali Al-Masudi, an Arab historian from the 10th century A.D., wrote about ancient Egypt claiming that a magic papyrus imprinted with symbols was placed under each stone, after which a metal rod was struck against the stone to initiate levitation, with the stone guided along a fenced path with metal poles. Some believe these poles could have been used to create high-frequency sound vibrations responsible for creating the levitation effects.

>In almost every culture where megaliths exist, legends also describe that the huge stones were moved by anti-gravity acoustic means. The Temple of Jupiter at Baalbek, Lebanon has a foundation containing the three largest stone blocks ever used in a man-made structure, each estimated to weigh approximately 800 tons, positioned together with such precision that not even a needle could fit between them.

His appearance was dreadfully frightening, and his skin was multicolored, darkly glittering scales. (4Q542)

The image is a digital illustration featuring a stylized depiction of a creature with a humanoid face and a hooded cloak. The creature has a predominantly purple hue, with a pattern of small, circular dots that give it a textured appearance. Its eyes are large and round, with a white iris, and it has a pointed nose. The creature's mouth is closed, and its expression is neutral. The background is a dark, starry sky with white stars scattered throughout, creating a sense of depth and space. The image has a somewhat surreal quality, with the creature's design and the cosmic backdrop evoking a sense of otherworldliness. There are no texts present in the image.

Space reptonigger frequency control devices?

>According to Morning Sky, Marduk and the SHET-I took one more precaution to isolate the human population and to make sure they received no information or assistance from outside friendly powers. They wanted them to focus only on producing for the sun god and knowing nothing else, as good slaves are expected to do. They constructed a network of high towers all over the planet, "which would transmit a cloud of electronic signals designed to keep the [human workers] in a fog, a docile state. The electronic blanket also served as a cover preventing outside signals from reaching the [human workers]." Upon reflection, this network of towers may have been the obelisks. The granite composition exhibits a certain electronic resonance. These obelisks are now all over the world. The original ancient Egyptian obelisks have been moved to the major cities, and others have been constructed in hundreds of minor locations. And in Washington, D.C., has been erected the largest one in the world, 555 feet high—the Washington Monument—which constitutes a direct connection with ancient Egypt and Babylonia. Is it possible that these obelisks constitute our "electronic blanket"?

Becomes less farfetched when linked to the sound engineering research done at Hypogeum off Hal-Saflieni in Malta and other megalithic sites, but in a negative context. We're looking at an aetheric effect, but sound is that medium that expresses liminality between the two, a dimensional phase shift. Malta is 111hz exactly, Research on the acoustic behavior in megalithic sites in the UK pointed out that they sustained a resonance at a sound frequency between 95 and 120 hertz.

This is the result in MRI scans, clearly shuts down decision making based on gut feelings and past experience.

>MRI scans show that the brain switches off the prefrontal cortex and deactivates the language center that is responsible for holistic processing, creativity, intuition, and inducing a phase at exactly 111 Hz. This reaction results in a divine level of meditation, the trance that some believe allows you to get connected with the universe, God or a creator.

>Fulcanelli in Le Mystere des Cathedrales referred to the Language of the Birds as "the language which teaches the mystery of things and unveils the most hidden truths." Often called the Green language or language of the gods, this sacred form of communication is believed to reveal the most perfect knowledge and secret wisdom to those initiated into its wonder.

>Considering the different names applied to this hidden language may provide hints on how it is learned or re-discovered. The association of the language with the color green gives the impression the language is one which comes with new life or a reconnection. As mentioned, while discussing The Green Cross, the color green has been seen for centuries to signify rebirth. A possible indication a person who understands the mysterious green language may have been spiritually awakened.

>To wonder what voice could accomplish Fulcanelli's description of the Green Language in ability to reveal 'the most hidden truths', may lead some to feel it is none other than the first, green, voice; the Will of God. It's possible that in order to hear it, one must be silent and listen.

Wirth argues that Arctida was the cradle of mankind. This is the starting point in Wirth's model. He claims that man originated at the North Pole, i.e., humanity is essentially a polar phenomenon. Hence Nordism as a method, as a vision of the particularities of the primordial language, primordial knowledge, and primordial religion. This is not the North Pole as an abstract concept (such as the mountain Meru), but a real pole where the continent of Arcotgaia lay and on which lived amazing people – the Hyperboreans. Contemplating the surrounding world, they developed the proto-language which lies at the heart of the complex of ideas which we have now, many thousands of years later.

Now about the primordial language. In Wirth's view, the main key to understanding this language, and all existing languages and traditions, is the year. The year and man, the year and God, the year and nature, the year and time, the year and space are, in Wirth's view, synonymous concepts. Man is the embodiment of condensed time. Time in and of itself is a divine manifestation.

The northern, polar cycle is the highest knowledge and, as follows, everything else is to be explained through the calendar. Special attention should be paid to the natural features of the North Pole. We know that a day there lasts not 24 hours, but six months, as does a night. For example, such a notion as the "midnight sun", which is addressed in many of the Dionysian mysteries and is a generally important element in multiple sacred theories, acquires an entirely natural sense in Arctida – natural-magical meaning. This is the sun that shines at midnight at the North Pole during the summer solstice. Indeed, there is sun, and there is midnight. The memory of this midnight sun, like the memory of the primordial homeland of our ancestors, has been preserved in traditional models and been passed down from generation to generation in the form of legends and stories.

>Some of the weirdest of these appertain to water. A typical one is the eerie legend of the Scholomance, or School of the Devil. In the heart of the mountains to the south of Sibiu there is a little lake of an almost inky surface, which is immensely deep. This lake is shunned by every Romanian, for it is here that the dread Scholomance is believed to exist; and here proceed those proud and profane scholars desirous of mastering the hidden secrets of Nature and acquiring supernatural powers. As usual in legends concerning the Devil, he gets the best of the bargain. In this instance he is content with a tithe. The Devil selects ten scholars at a time, and proceeds to initiate them into his awful mysteries, stipulating, however, that when nine of them are released and return to their homes as accredited and qualified sorcerers, he may retain the tenth. This poor slave of the Devil never returns to earth to see the clear sky overhead; instead, the baffled magician mounts on the back of a dragon, who, in fair weather, lies asleep under the deep waters of the lake, where he abides all the time with his infernal master, assisting him to brew the thunder which from time to time reverberates through the mountain passes. One can imagine the captured scholar doing in finitely better work as creator of "effects" behind the scenes at Drury Lane or the Lyceum, or as a performer at Maskelyne and Devant's. A duller task than making thunder in a cold lake all the year round I can scarcely conceive of. The manufacture of Christmas numbers in the summer time would be sheer rapture compared with this tame routine (Hoppé, 1924, p188-189).

One hail-storm, in the middle of a hot summer afternoon, beating down upon the ripened fields may destroy the hopes and labors of a season and with them the food for the following winter is gone as well. When the Romanian appears particularly worried about it, along come the Solomonari. These are men travelling about and claiming to have the knowledge how to drive away hail from any locality by means of their secret incantations. While some of the peasants are beginning to entertain some doubts concerning the ability of these Solomonari to make good their claim they prefer to be on the safe side and the Solomonar, as a rule, has no difficulty to collect his modest fee. It would be unwise, argues the Romanian, to draw the ire of a Solomonar upon one's self over the matter of a little money. Cool, the description of scholomancers, Magnolia and the airships is clearly related to the kabbalah description of original Earth and the cursed Eve serpent, which was sourced at a sort mystics convention held by the jews during the Babylonian exile (6th century BCE), including Aryan magi and others. Rather than become unrecognizable over time, myth from the mists, the story seems to be ongoing and gets regular updates.

The object appears to be a small, round, dark spot with a lighter center, possibly a star or a celestial body. The background is a lighter shade, possibly sky or a cloudy sky, and there is a faint outline of a mountain or hill on the left side of the image. The photograph has a grainy texture, which suggests it may have been taken with a grainy camera or film. There are no texts or discernible markings on the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of early photography, with a focus on >Trevor James Constable's "Sky Critter Theory" is perhaps one of the strangest theories advanced as an explanation for the UFO phenomenon. Trevor James Constable was one of the proponents of the theory, claiming that UFO's came from a parallel universe known as Etheria and that there were two categories of UFO, some were machines and others living creatures. These invisible creatures he called "Sky Critters" and that they live in the atmosphere. Constable claimed to have captured both types of UFO on film, while working with James Woods during the 1950's and 60's.

>According to Trevor Constable: "The so-called "spacecrafts" are just as "etheric" as the bioforms; as they "are built of matter of the etheric plane..." , and powered by the life-force, what William Reich calls "orgone energy". Their builders are, Constable tells us, a race of intelligent and benign beings, the "etherians", whose world is the same as our world, except it is of a higher vibratory level. The craft become visible and tangible when they materialise into our own world"

>In the Cosmic Pulse, Trevor labeled each frame of these amoeboid-shaped creatures. It's only speculation on my part, but I can't help but believe that these huge living creatures captured on infrared film by Trevor Constable are the same elemental beings that we are referring to as Sylphs at this web site. Remember that the name "Sylph" was coined by the ancient Greeks, who were obviously capable of detecting the presence of these creatures with the ordinary senses.

>According to ZS Livingstone, Sylphs can take on any physical cloud-form appearance they wish or they can remain invisible to the unaided eye. Sylphs exist in the borderlands between the third and fourth dimension, so it doesn't surprise me that they possess some attributes of both dimensions -invisibility yes, but they also have a heat-producing body that will show up on infrared film.

Than all the golden greenness of the hills,
And in its shadows glorious far beyond
The purple dropping skirts of thunder-cloud,
A city of all colours and fair shapes,
And gleams of falling water day and night . . .
Lit up with rainbow fountains in the day,
Lit up with rain of coloured stars by night . .
And out beyond and sleeping in the light
The islands and the azure of the sea,
And upwards, through a labyrinth of spires
And turrets, and steep alabaster walls,
The city rises—all its jewelled fronts
Shining to seaward . . .
Until at last through miles of shadowy air
The blue and violet mountains shut the sky."

"People when they see clouds in air say it is air (vapour) and a sign of rain, but there is more in them than they suppose. For there is in the sky another world made by wizards and witches who, when they died, were not admitted to heaven, and so they made a world for themselves, which has a sea (lake) in it. And when the weather is dark, and clouds fly before the storm, those clouds are boats full of hail, and in them are wizards and witches, who throw the hail at one another, and so it falls to earth and does great harm. When this happens one should invoke the spirit of thunder (Tituno or Tignia)."

"Domdaniel is a fictional cavernous hall situated beneath the roots of the sea, depicted as a seminary and meeting place for evil magicians, sorcerers, and malevolent supernatural beings in European literary adaptations of Arabian tales and Romantic literature. The concept originates from continuations of the Arabian Nights, specifically in the 1788–1793 "Arabian Tales" by Dom Chavis and M. Cazotte, where it serves as a hidden academy for practitioners of dark arts, but it gained prominence through its central role in Robert Southey's 1801 epic poem Thalaba the Destroyer, a metrical romance inspired by Orientalist themes. In Southey's narrative, the Domdaniel is the stronghold of a cabal of sorcerers who orchestrate the destruction of the hero Thalaba's family to thwart a prophecy foretelling their downfall; Thalaba ultimately infiltrates the cavern, destroys the orb of Eblis (the Islamic equivalent of Satan), causing the entire structure to collapse and destroying the magicians, before being translated into Paradise, fulfilling his destiny."

The image depicts a fantastical, cave-like setting with a variety of structures and elements. At the center, there is a large, dome-shaped structure with a pointed top, surrounded by smaller domes and towers. The dome is illuminated by a vibrant, multicolored light that casts a glow on the surrounding structures.

To the left, there is a large, tree-like structure with a pointed top, resembling a tree or a giant fern. The structure is adorned with a multitude of small, colorful lights that add to its mystical ambiance.

On the right, there is a smaller, dome-shaped structure with a pointed top, which appears to be a smaller version of the central dome. This structure is surrounded by a lush, green environment with trees and plants, suggesting a lush, natural setting.

In the foreground, there is a train or vehicle with a rounded front, moving along a track that curves around the central dome. The train's motion is suggested by the slight blur and the way the light reflects off its surface.

The background is filled with a starry sky, with stars and nebulae visible, adding to the otherworldly atmosphere of the scene. The overall color palette is dominated by shades of purple, blue, and green, with the central dome and the train in white, creating a contrast that draws the eye.

The image is a digital illustration, and the style is reminiscent of fantasy or science fiction, with a focus on the surreal and otherworldly elements. There are no texts present in the image.

Lash talks about Melchizedek being critical to archonic forces, maybe higher up than the tribal desert donkey, does seem somewhat anomalous.

>11Q13(11QMelch) is a fragment of a text, dated to the end of the second or start of the first century BC, about Melchizedek, found in Cave 11 at Qumran in the West Bank and part of the Dead Sea Scrolls. Melchizedek is seen as a divine being in the text and is referred to as "El" or "Elohim", titles usually reserved for God

>In the Hebrew Bible, Melchizedek was the king of Salem and priest of El Elyon (often translated as 'God Most High'). He is first mentioned in Genesis 14:18–20, where he brings out bread and wine and blesses Abram (Abraham), subsequent to Abram's victory in the Battle of the Vale of Siddim.

<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Melchizedek>

Then there is the 36 Tzadikim Nistarim who seem to be Melchizedeks possessed secret agents, maybe hybrids or something.

>The Lamed-Vav Tzaddikim are also called the Nistarim ("concealed ones"). In our folk tales, they emerge from their self-imposed concealment and, by the mystic powers, which they possess, they succeed in averting the threatened disasters of a people persecuted by the enemies that surround them. They return to their anonymity as soon as their task is accomplished, 'concealing' themselves once again in a Jewish community wherein they are relatively unknown

Plutarch, Democritus, and Tacitus vs some fuckwit with nothing

"Historian. He wrote Tactics in 2 books, [and]On the Jews; in which [latter] he says that they bowed down to the golden head of an ass and every seven years hunted a stranger and attacked him and tore his flesh into thin strips and thus killed him." (Damocritus, Suda, Delta #49)

>But I should think that if the Jews had such an antipathy against a hog, they would kill it as the magicians do mice; when, on the contrary, they are by their religion as much prohibited to kill as to eat it. And perhaps there may be some reason given for this; for as the ass is worshipped by them as the first discoverer of fountains. (Plutarch, Quæstiones Convivales 4.5.2)

>Those who say that Typhon fled from the battle on an ass for seven days, and having been saved produced sons, Hierosolymus and Judeaus, are at this point clearly dragging Jewish issues into the story." (Plutarch, De Iside et Osiride 363C-D)

>Nothing, however, distressed them so much as the scarcity of water, and they had sunk ready to perish in all directions over the plain, when a herd of wild asses was seen to retire from their pasture to a rock shaded by trees. Moyses followed them, and, guided by the appearance of a grassy spot, discovered an abundant spring of water. This furnished relief. After a continuous journey for six days, on the seventh they possessed themselves of a country, from which they expelled the inhabitants, and in which they founded a city and a temple. [...] In their holy place they have consecrated an image of the animal by whose guidance they found deliverance from their long and thirsty wanderings." (Tacitus, Histories V:3-4)

Through the mind, which, after all, is their mind, the predators inject into the lives of human beings whatever is convenient for them. And they ensure, in this manner, a degree of security to act as a buffer against their fear."

They reasoned that man must have been a complete being at one point, with stupendous insights, feats of awareness that are mythological legends nowadays. And then, everything seems to disappear, and we have now a sedated man. What I'm saying is that what we have against us is not a simple predator. It is very smart, and organized. It follows a methodical system to render us useless. Man, the magical being that he is destined to be, is no longer magical. He's an average piece of meat." The dragon is depicted in a dynamic pose, with its wings spread wide and its head turned to the side, as if it is flying. Below the dragon, there is a quote in a serif font that reads, "It simply isn't an adventure worth telling if there aren't any dragons." The quote is in a larger font size than the dragon, emphasizing its importance.

The background of the image features a dark, cloudy sky with a hint of a mountain range in the distance. The sky is filled with dark clouds, suggesting a moody atmosphere. The mountain range is depicted in a muted color palette, with shades of gray and brown.

At the bottom of the image, there is a small, stylized text that reads "J.R.R. Tolkien." This text is in a smaller font size compared to the quote and is placed at the bottom of the image, indicating a reference to the author of the quote.

The overall style of the image is reminiscent of fantasy literature, with the dragon and the quote suggesting a connection to the works of J.R.R. Tolkien, the author of the quote. The use of a fantasy theme is supported by the dragon's design and the mountainous landscape, which are common elements in the works of J.R.R. Tolkien.

Back to magical vowels, this is a summary of Nag Hammadi: The Discourse on the Ogdoad and Ennead.

>Here we find a striking altered state of consciousness induced by a strange magical incantation of vowels. When the priests of Egypt sang their hymns to praise their gods they uttered the seven Greek vowels in the prescribed order, the sound of these seven vowels was so beautiful that people preferred this music to the flute or lyre. The seven vowels correspond to the seven notes of the octave, which are related to the seven planets. The esoteric songbook of the Hermetic community in Alexandria plays a central role at the moments of awakening described in the Hermetica.

>Hermes reminds Tat, of the progress he has made thanks to the books, which although belong to a lower stage in the progress towards gnosis, are nevertheless necessary. But they do not suffice, because discursive language simply “does not get as far as the truth.”

>Hermes and Tat, along with several brethren, all of which have been reborn, enter a deep meditative state. Hermes begins by calling attention to God’s supreme divine attributes, including the fact that he is named only in silence. The prayer contains a string of mysterious words and vowels that represent God’s “secret name”. A single voice sings the tone, which is answered by the choir, until all vowels are sung. The chanting gets more and more intense, and with every vowel the consciousness of the pupil rises up through the planetary spheres until he is at the top in the highest level, and goes beyond the cosmos, experiencing the Eighth, and the Ninth, and finally, the One, where he sees a fountain bubbling with life.

The image is a surrealistic painting that depicts a scene of intense religious or spiritual symbolism. At the center, there is a figure with a radiant, glowing aura, which suggests a divine or divine-like presence. This figure is surrounded by a multitude of smaller figures, some of which appear to be skeletons, and others that resemble angels or other celestial beings. The background is filled with a dense, dark cloud-like atmosphere, which could symbolize the underworld or the spiritual realm.

The painting is rendered in a style that is reminiscent of the Art Nouveau movement, characterized by its use of flowing lines and a sense of movement. The color palette is dominated by warm, earthy tones, with golden and brown hues that give the scene a mystical and otherworldly feel. The overall composition and the use of light and shadow create a sense of depth and dimension, enhancing the surrealistic quality of the image.

>The pupil experiences a moment of fear, and Hermes tells him to bring his focus back to the hymn. The final stage of the ascent must be mastered by the pupil alone, verbal instruction is useless. Hermes’s words, who have guided the pupil, are no longer of any use. The pupil expresses himself by means of silent hymns that are heard and understood only by an interior faculty of perception. In fact, the most fundamental statement of the pupil is that what he is seeing cannot be put into words.

>The initiation has been completed. The pupil has now found peace, and wants to thank God for having granted him the supreme vision he had been asking for. A distinction is implied between the silent hymn of contemplation that was sung during the ecstatic state of the Eighth and Ninth, and verbal hymns that may be addressed to God afterwards, as signs of gratitude.

>Hermes instructs his son to write everything down in hieroglyphs and place them in his sanctuary at the right astrological moment, and protect the book with an apotropaic formula, designed to avert evil. So that future generations will be able to read it. Presumably, then, it is the very text that we have been analysing.

Last link is particularly detailed.

Noticed the Ka pose in the picture, didn't post source because its jewish, but its kept me occupied this morn so might as well. Will have a look for the gnostic original text. Figure these vowel "keycodes" are somehow related to traversing the duat in the afterlife and finding the exit.

>The ancient Egyptians believed that the ka would embark on a journey to the afterlife after death. This journey was fraught with challenges and dangers, and the ka needed to successfully navigate these trials to reach the afterlife. The ka would be judged by Osiris, the god of the underworld, and would be required to prove its worthiness to enter the afterlife.

>The ka had to overcome a series of tests and trials, and the successful completion of these challenges would determine its fate in the afterlife. The ka would be judged based on its actions in life, and it would need to demonstrate that it had lived a virtuous and ethical life. If the ka was found worthy, it would be granted eternal life in the afterlife.

>The Marcosian perspective interprets these aeons as symbolically mirrored within the human body, creating a profound microcosmic correspondence.

>Marcus found in Scripture and in Nature repeated examples of the occurrence of his mystical numbers four six eight ten twelve thirty. If so great mysteries were contained in names it naturally followed that to know the right name of each celestial power was a matter of vital importance; and such knowledge the heretical teachers promised to bestow.

>This knowledge included the possession of formulae by the use of which the initiated would after death become incomprehensible and invisible to principalities and powers and leaving their bodies in this lower creation and their souls with the Demiurge ascend in their spirits to the Pleroma. Probably the Egyptian religion contributed this element to Gnosticism. Some of these Marcosian formulae were in Hebrew of which Irenaeus has preserved specimens much corrupted by copyists.

>At the dawn of the Christian era, the ages-old healing contact with the earth was broken, the telluric voices ceased to speak to the Pagan people. As recounted in Plutarch's essay "On Why the Oracles Came to Fail," a voice in the wilderness cried out, "The Great God Pan is dead." The lament for the death of Pan can be situated in a temporal frame. Around 150 C.E. the connotation of the Latin word paganus changed, due to the mounting assault on Pagan values by converts to the salvationist creed. Tertullian, one of the first Christian ideologues to openly attack Gnostics, argued that pagani be regarded as "civilian" noncombatants in the open war on non-Christians. Converts to the new religion called themselves "enrolled members of Christ (members of his militant church)," and viewed non-Christians "as not of the army so enrolled." It was inevitable that these "civilians" would be in harm's way in the escalating war against whatever challenged the emergent belief system. Pagans all over Europa rapidly became collateral damage in the Christian campaign against heresy.

The big horned thing is probably Ashteroth like you mentioned, actual moloch has a calf head. The "moloch" owl at Bohemian Grove also her, groves being synonymous with the name. Directly related to the fattening of the Greek for sacrifice in the grove, which seems particularly cruel, except when compared to the Carthaginian practice of raising slaves for the slaughter, and rumoured modern subterranean equivalent. Tyre comes up a lot in these things.

Obi-Wan:

>Mos Eisley spaceport. You will never find a more wretched hive of scum and villainy. We must be cautious.

>Astarte, great goddess of the ancient Middle East and chief deity of Tyre, Sidon, and Elat, important Mediterranean seaports. Hebrew scholars now feel that the goddess Ashtoreth mentioned so often in the Bible is a deliberate conflation of the Greek name Astarte and the Hebrew word boshet, "shame," indicating the Hebrews' contempt for her cult.

King Solomon, married to foreign wives, "followed Astarte the goddess of the Sidonians" (1 Kings 11:5)

"Isa 57:5 who burn with lust among the oaks, under every luxuriant tree, who slaughter your children in the valleys, under the clefts of the rocks?"

With this agrees the ancient name, Ashteroth-Karnaim (or, "the horned Ashteroth") of a city in Bashan (Genesis 14:5; Deuteronomy 1:4; Joshua 13:12).

'Ashtoreth, whom the Phnicians called

Astart, queen of heaven, with crescent horns

To whose bright image, nightly by the moon

Sidonian virgins paid their vows and songs.'

Exodus 34:13 "But ye shall destroy their altars, break their images, and cut down their groves."

The Hebrew word for "groves" here is the word "asherah" defined by Strong's:

>Ashera(h)=groves(for idol worship) 1) a Babylonian (Astarte)-Canaanite goddess (of fortune and happiness), the supposed consort of Baal, her images 1a) the goddess, goddessess 1b) sacred trees or poles set up near an altar

(Apion, as quoted by Flavius Josephus, Against Apion, book 2, ch8)

"Behind one tree in the midst.—The noun "tree" is a conjectural explanation. The Hebrew text gives the "one" in the masculine, and is explained as referring either (1) to the Hierophant, who led the worshippers; or (2), as with a contemptuous reluctance to utter the name of the false deity, to Thammuz. The Hebrew margin gives "one" in the feminine, and this may have been meant for the Asherah, the "grove," or Phallic symbol of idolatrous worship. If we adopt the masculine, and refer it to Thammuz, the word may connect itself with the lamentations of the Syrian maidens over Thammuz (Adonis) as over an only son. (Comp. Milton, Paradise Lost, i.)"

Shekhina glory seems to refer to the plagiarized idea of the donkey demon controlling the clouds for transport, but also a cultist nod to the smoke of sacrifice.

Note David's mention of "[H]is clouds." Numbers 10:34 refers to "the cloud of the LORD." The clouds God rides (compare Psalm 68:4) are unique for at least two awe-inspiring reasons.

"And the LORD went before them by day in a pillar of cloud to lead the way, and by night in a pillar of fire to give them light, so as to go by day and night. He did not take away the pillar of cloud by day or the pillar of fire by night from before the people."

"Shekhina('the dwelling or the presence of God') is a concept in Kabbalism(mystic tradition of Judaism, Talmud), freemasonry and gnosticism, branches of the Saturn cult, the worship of Saturn(the God/Allah/YHVH program). It is associated with Temple of Solomons symbolism. Fire (shin: fire) sacrifice and incense is used to evoke Lucifer(distortion of the Divine Feminine). In Revelation 9 the Abyss is opened with smoke billowing out."

>In Hollywood films the Shekhinah is embodied by the film noir archetype of cigarette smoking Femme Fatale (Lilith archetype, Faye Dunaway in Chinatown, Sean Young in Blade Runner, Mia Wallace in Pulp Fiction, Rose McGowan in the Doom Generation, Pam Grier in Jackie Brown).

>I recently stumbled upon an article that confirmed that a large statue of Moloch had been placed at the entry to the Colosseum in Rome, best known as the site of Christians sacrificed to wild animals and gladiators for entertainment and as an admonition that Christianity was an enemy of Rome – to be shown no mercy. What is particularly curious about this story, is that the statue was put there with the apparent blessing of the Vatican.

>The article states the following by way of explanation;

"Previously, the Catholic Church had made the Colosseum a sacred site to honor these first Christians martyred for their faith, even placing Stations of the Cross there for the faithful to contemplate their sacrifice. Now it's guarded by the pagan god Molech, whose demand for child sacrifice has been compared to the modern epidemic of abortion, and the faithful are greeted with a statue honoring a pagan deity whose murderous spirit still seeks to kill children.” (CBN News).

>Once in a while, there is a story that has the power to capture the Spirit of the Age or Zeitgeist. We are living in particularly Saturnine times and with the upcoming Grand Conjunction of Saturn and Jupiter in Saturn’s domicile, the already ominous signs beg further analysis. Moloch is Saturn by another name. As the god of money, he emphasizes the materialism of Saturn. More grotesquely, he is known as the god who demanded child sacrifices, consumed by a furnace in his belly.

>Textual evidence from ancient Mesopotamia identifies Kronos as the Phoenician Baal Hammon, and the earlier Mesopotamian deities Kumarbi (Hurrians), El (Canaan), Dagan (Amorites and Philistines), Assur (Assyria), and Enlil (Akkad and Sumer). All of them, from Kumarbi to Enlil, have their origins in northwest Syria or southeast Turkey, in an area generally bounded on the south by Jebel Bishri in northeast Syria and the Amanus mountains in southern Turkey. And that's precisely the region that eventually produced the Amorites and the tribe from which the Amorite kings of Babylon claimed descent, the Tidanu/Ditanu, which apparently took the name of the old gods called "Titans" by the later Greeks.

Very similar tale to Kumarbi/Saturn founding the black stone cult, but with added serpents.

>In Egypt was a serpent named Thermuthis, which was looked upon as very sacred; and the natives are said to have made use of it as a royal tiara, with which they ornamented the statues of Isis. We learn from Diodorus Siculus that the kings of Egypt wore high bonnets, which terminated in a round ball, and the whole was surrounded by figures of asps. The priests, likewise, upon their bonnets had the representation of serpents. The ancients had a notion that when Saturn devoured his own children, his wife Ops deceived him by substituting a large stone in lieu of one of his sons, which stone was called Abadir. But Ops and Opis, represented here as a feminine, was the serpent deity, and Abadir is the same personage under a different denomination. Abadir seems to be a variation of Ob-Adur, and signifies the serpent god Orus. One of these stones, which Saturn was supposed to have swallowed instead of a child, stood, according to Pausanias, at Delphi. It was esteemed very sacred, and used to have libations of wine poured upon it daily; and upon festivals was otherwise honoured. The purport of the above was probably this: it was for a long time a custom to offer children at the altar of Saturn; but in process of time they removed it, and in its room erected a stone pillar, before which they made their vows, and offered sacrifices of another nature.

>This stone which they thus substituted was called Ab-Adar, from the deity represented by it. The term Ab generally signifies a father, but in this instance it certainly relates to a serpent, which was indifferently styled Ab, Aub, and Ob. Some regard Abaddon, or, as it is mentioned in the Book of the Revelation, Abaddon, to have been the name of the same Ophite god, with whose worship the world had been so long infected. He is termed Abaddon, the angel of the bottomless pit - the prince of darkness. In another place he is described as the dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil, and Satan. Hence the learned Heinsius is supposed to be right in the opinion which he has given upon this passage, when he makes Abaddon the same as the serpent Pytho.

>The Cuthites, under the title of Heliadae, having settled at Rhodes, as they were Hivites, or Ophites, the island was in consequence named Ophiusa. There was likewise a tradition that it had once swarmed with serpents. (Bochart says the island is said to have been named Rhodus from Rhad, a Syriac word for a serpent). The like notion prevailed almost in every place where they settled. They came under the more general titles of Leleges and Pelasgi; but more particularly of Eloprians, Europians, Oropians, Asopians, Inopians, Ophionians, and Aethiopes, as appears from the names which they bequeathed; and in most places where they resided there were handed down traditions which alluded to their original title of Ophites. In Phrygia, and upon the Hellespont, whither they sent out colonies very early, was a people styled the Ophiogeneis, or the serpent breed, who were said to retain an affinity and correspondence with serpents; and a notion prevailed that some hero, who had conducted them, was changed from a serpent to a man. In Colchis was a river Ophis, and there was another of the same name in Arcadia. It was so named from a body of people who settled upon its banks, and were said to have been conducted by a serpent.

>Thucydides mentions a people of Aetolia, called Ophionians; and the temple of Apollo at Petara, in Lycia, seems to have had its first institution from a priestess of the same name. The island of Cyprus was called Ophiusa, and Ophiodes, from the serpents with which it was supposed to have abounded. Of what species they were is nowhere mentioned, excepting only that about Paphos there was said to have been a kind of serpent with two legs. By this is meant the Ophite race, who came from Egypt, and from Syria, and got footing in this island. They settled also in Crete, where they increased greatly in numbers; so that Minos was said by an unseemly allegory, opheis ouresai, serpentes, minxisse. The island Seriphus was one vast rock, by the Romans called saxum seriphium, and made use of as a large kind of prison for banished persons. It is represented as having once abounded with serpents, and it is styled by Virgil, serpentifera, as the passage is corrected by Scaliger.

>It is said by the Greeks that Medusa's head was brought by Perseus; by this is meant the serpent Deity, whose worship was here introduced by people called Peresians. Medusa's head denoted divine wisdom, and the island was sacred to the serpent, as is apparent from its name.

There exists an absolute Foundation, unknowable in its own nature, which the doctrine names E (Essence). From this, there is no direct contact, for it infinitely transcends all form and all thought. However, by the inexorable law of participation, from it emanate the ϵ (Energies), vital and luminous flows that constitute the very substance of all that exists. These energies are the vehicle through which the Absolute makes itself present, in an attenuated and relative mode, within the domain of manifestation.

The world is not, therefore, a product of chance or of a chaotic will. Prior to all concreteness, there exist the A (Archetypal Forms), primordial and universal models that structure all possible identity. Each archetype possesses an A-core (Archetypal Core), an essential and invariant signature, like a divine seal impressed upon the very idea of the thing. Every concrete entity, every x (Entity) found in the world, is the progeny of at least one of these archetypes. This means that, in its most intimate root, each being participates in a universal form, preserving within itself, in an indestructible manner, this sacred core.

The process by which the archetype is projected into concrete existence is mediated by an ontological mapping, an F (Functor of Participation), which translates the universal into the particular. It is here, at this critical point of transition between the plane of pure ideas (C_archetypes) and the plane of manifested entities (W_world), that the agent of the fall intervenes.

The doctrine teaches that the current state of the world does not reflect the original purity of emanation. Between the archetype and its progeny, a δ (Tensor of Distortion) has been inserted, commonly called the Demiurge. This δ is not a substantial being, but a parasitic operator. Its function is not to create (for only E is the source) but to deform. It acts upon the process $A > x$, introducing noise, fragmentation, and obscurity. It is like a noisy filter on a divine communication channel, or a lossy data compression, the general image of the archetype arrives, but blurred, with artifacts and imperfections.

Crucially, the axiom declares that δ , however much it distorts, cannot destroy the A-core. The archetypal core remains intact, like an identity hash invariant under all corruption. Thus, the evil introduced by the demiurge is never absolute or creative, it is always relative, secondary, a mere deformation of that which already is. The Demiurge is a counterfeiter who possesses no gold of its own, only knowing how to paint inferior metal yellow.

The state of each concrete entity is measured by its χ (Coefficient of Energetic Integration). This coefficient represents the degree of coherence, alignment, and synthesis of the energies (ϵ) that constitute it. As long as χ remains low, the entity lives in a state of dispersed, fragmented, and dormant proto-experience. There exists, however, a θ (Threshold of Consciousness), a critical value of integration. When, by appropriate means, $\chi \geq \theta$, unified consciousness arises in the entity (the capacity for reflection, self-recognition, and ultimately, recognition of its own archetypal origin).

Here the core of the spiritual path in this doctrine is revealed, as salvation is technical (gnosis). It is not a mere gratuitous pardon, but a rigorous process of reintegration. The path consists precisely in increasing χ , purifying the distortions of δ and realigning concrete existence with its own proper A-core. This is achieved through ascetic practice, through the intellectual knowledge of archetypal invariants, and through conscious participation in the divine energies (ϵ). As χ grows, the influence of the demiurgic tensor diminishes, for the entity reconnects with the source of its own form.

Thus, for the beginner, understanding this structure is the first step toward liberation. The world is seen as an ontological battlefield, where the divine essence, in the form of indestructible archetypal cores, struggles to express itself through the veil of distortions of δ . Human consciousness is not an accident, but a sign that the threshold θ can be reached. The doctrine, therefore, proclaims an energetic pan-animism (everything participates in the life of ϵ), a non-ontological evil (δ is an operator, not a foundation), and a technical soteriology (reintegration through the increase of χ).

Nice, brilliant really, concise with little room for the demiurge to slip in distortion, and interesting with the archetypes. Has me thinking of breaking things down beyond anthropomorphic archonic energy siphoning forms (the gods). Then the gap between concept and archetype core measured by but not the full definition of χ (Coefficient of Energetic Integration), and its relation to semantics and "source code" language. Also I guess everyone would want to know what their archetype was, which could relate to what they find important rather than what they think they are. Anyway the whole thing has a pure feeling.

>There exists, however, a θ (Threshold of Consciousness), a critical value of integration. When, by appropriate means, $\chi \geq \theta$, unified consciousness arises in the entity (the capacity for reflection, self-recognition, and ultimately, recognition of its own archetypal origin).

One thing we found in reference to the Solis Serpentis name, which indicates a priest-caste that existed in ancient times, is from General Forlong's Rivers of Life:

>So, it is not too far-fetched to see the Cuthites come to Cutha, city of the Underworld. It is also possible they migrated to Opis on the Tigris, as well. Cuthites are said by Jennings to have settled at Rhodes. One of Rhodes' colonies was Rhoda (Rosas) on the Northeast coast of Spain. Rhoda is an early connection to Rheda, just northwest of there, in France. And Rheda and the Rhedones ("Fern People") pertains to Rennes-le-Chateau!

>The migration of priests to Euboea probably took place early in the Tanite Dynasty (early 11th Century B C E). Of course, it is possible, too, that this took place earlier, after Aknaten died in the middle of the 14th Century B C E. 11th Century B C E would be not long after the war of the Benjaminites took place, and some of the Tribe moved on, to, among other places, Arcadia.

>And, remember, what Jennings wrote, that not only was there a city named Eve in Arcadia, but:

"In Colchis was a river Ophis, and there was another of the same name in Arcadia. It was so named from a body of people who settled upon its banks, and were said to have been conducted by a serpent."

>If one examines Poussin's paintings, it would seem that he is telling a story, in several of these paintings, about several parallel stories. One of these deals with the surface story matter, but others include the underground stream tradition, pertaining to Arcadia, pertaining to the South of France. >About fifty years before the building of the Temple of Solomon in Jerusalem, a colony of Grecians, chiefly Ionians, complaining of the narrow limits of their country, in an increased population, emigrated; and having been settled in Asia Minor, gave to that country the name of Ionia.

>No doubt that people carried with them their manners, sciences, and religion; and themysteries of Eleusisamong the rest. Accordingly we find that one of their cities, Byblos, was famed for the worship of Apollo, as Apollonia had been with their ancestors.

>These Ionians, participating in the improved state of civilization in which their mother country, Greece, then was, cultivated the sciences, and useful arts; but made themselves most conspicuous in architecture, and invented or improved the order called by their own name Ionian.

>These Ionians formed a society, whose purpose was to employ themselves in erecting buildings. The general assembly of the society, was first held at Theos; but afterwards, in consequence of some civil commotions, passed to Lebedos.

>This sect or society was now called the Dionysian Artificers, as Bacchus was supposed to be the inventor of building theatres; and they performed the Dionysian festivities. They afterwards extended themselves to Syria, Persia, and India.

>From this period, the Science of Astronomy which had given rise to the symbols of the Dionysian rites, became connected with types taken from the art of building.

>These Ionian societies divided themselves into different sections, or minor assemblies. Some of those small or dependent associations; had also their distinguishing names.

Gibil is god of the black stone, interesting that these cuthites/serpent priests were originally called negral/gibil.

>All gods of the pantheon of the Arab city Emesa, in Syria, had Semitic names, with one exception: the supreme god Elagabal, who represented the sun. His unusual name suggests an earlier origin and suggests this god was a local deity, related to similar pre-Arabian gods from Canaan. The Aramaic form of name of Elagabal is Ilaha Gabal, meaning "God of the mountain"

>Mountain gods had been known in Anatolia, Syria, and Palestine since Hittite times, and they continued to be venerated up until the Roman age. They were often portrayed with eagles. At a later stage, the worshippers of Elagabal were influenced by the cult of the Babylonian sun god Šamaš. Elagabal has also been compared to the Chaldaean god Gibil, which can be translated as "god of the black stone". Gebal is a Semitic root which means "to create"

>"The true origin of the divine name elah-Gabal was revealed on the day Mr. Friedrich Delitzsch established that the name of the god Fire of the ancient pre-Semitic people of the Schoumers and Akkads, subsequently adopted by the Chaldeo-Babylonian religion of the Semitic period, that this name, although written bil-gi by virtue of a law of reversal of the order of characters in the orthograph of which we have a good number of examples, read Gibil, a word which in the Acadian language is well known as meaning "to burn", as a verb, and "fire", as a noun. The god Gibil of Chaldea is surely the god Gabal of Emesa, and this is not the only example we have of a non-Semitic and Acadian divine denomination, passing among purely Semitic peoples through the influence of Babylon. Everything comes together to prove the identity of the two characters." (SOL ELAGABALUS, François Lenormant, published in Revue de l'histoire des religions, Vol. 3 (1881), pp. 310-322)

DaCosta ends his essay with the statement that after the Dionysian Artificers made it to Israel to work on the Temple, some of their rites were introduced, in a modified form, to be compatible with the Monotheism... Yet we would say that the Artificers simply attached themselves to the most learned of those who weren't propagandists of the Yahwehcultus, and then DaCosta states that eventually this group of Initiates became known in Maccabean times as Hasidim. These mystics were responsible for the formation of the Essene communities, Da Costa says. Undoubtedly this is true, as it is also true that some influence came from Buddhist missionaries, who came west to Alexandria. Also, King Attalus I of Pergamon granted land to these people, but eventually they were exiled.

Robert I. Clegg, in Mackey's Revised History of Freemasonry, Volume I (1921), gives us some information as to this commission:

"Later history of the association of Dionysian Architects forms no part of the Legend just cited. But we may here to advantage trace their progress. About seven hundred years after the building of the Temple at Jerusalem, they are said to have been incorporated by the King of Pergamum, an ancient province of Mysia, as a society exclusively engaged in the erection of public buildings such as theaters and temples. They settled at Teos, an Ionian city on the coast of Asia Minor, where notwithstanding its troubles they remained for several centuries. Among the works by them were a magnificent theater and a splendid temple of Dionysus, ruins of which still remain.

The image is a digital graphic with a dark blue background that features a cartoon depiction of a cat wearing a space helmet and goggles, sitting inside a spaceship with a dotted pattern. The spaceship is floating in space with a bright blue star in the background. The cat appears to be looking out of the spaceship's window, which is a circular window with a dotted pattern. Above the cat, there is a text in white font that reads "THE ABRAHAMIC RELIGIONS ARE A PLAGUE UPON THE EARTH." Below the cat, there is a smaller text in white font that says "flipp." The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, with a playful and exaggerated depiction of religious beliefs.

The Teians sending representatives to Rome requesting that the Myonessians should not be permitted to fortify their city, the Dionysiacs removed to Lebedos, about fifteen miles from Teos, where they were welcomed.

"In the 5th Century of the Christian Era, the Emperor Theodosius forbid all mystical associations byt the Dionysiacs are said to have continued their existenceuntil the time of the Crusades. Bump. I'd posit that the black stone and the god of the black stone are not Saturn.

<https://goddesses-and-gods.blogspot.com/2008/08/saturn-swallowing-stone-substituted-for.html?m=1>

>At last Rhea [...] substituted for him a rock enveloped in swaddling clothes—which Saturn, ignorant of the deception practiced upon him, immediately swallowed. [...] The stone swallowed by Saturn in lieu of his youngest son was placed by Jupiter at Delphi, where it was held in great veneration and was daily anointed.

<https://www.ancient-origins.net/artifacts-other-artifacts/sacred-omphalos-stone-navel-world-and-communicator-gods-002655>

>A later legend states that the god Apollo slayed the great serpent Python so that he could establish his oracular temple at Delphi, and that the omphalos marked the exact spot where he slayed Python. This myth may sometimes be found on ancient coins which depict an omphalos stone with a serpent wound around it.

The omphalos entwined with serpent would become the Orphic egg of Phanes/Jupiter. The Essenes are said to originate from the teachings of a "Righteous Teacher" but that word for teacher (Zadok) was also a proper noun for the planet Jupiter. The early Artificers received admittance to Pergamun because it was still a notorious refuge for Hellenic pagans. I'd also guess these cultists did not flee overcrowding but fled the growing disdain for their public rites (we know polite Hellenic society began to view its more carnal traditions as primitive) to Asia Minor where the eastern worship of Jupiter (like with Jupiter-Sabazios) retained more focus on his role as ecstatic fertility rain-maker than the hygienic Greeks or orderly Latins were comfortable with.

The image shows a large, dark-colored rock sculpture displayed on a white pedestal. The sculpture appears to be a natural stone, with a rough texture and a smooth, matte finish. It has a prominent, elongated shape with a slightly curved top, and its surface is speckled with small, irregularly shaped holes. The background is a simple, neutral color, with a hint of a beige wall and a white door or partition. The lighting in the room is soft, casting gentle shadows on the sculpture and the pedestal. There are no visible texts or inscriptions on the sculpture. The style of the image is a straightforward, non-stylized photograph, focusing on the object without any additional context or embellishments.

Pergamon, where Artificers went, was Troy in Anatolia. Guess this was the last bastion of the old nature cults, and the transfer of the black stone to Rome a final fall. The orgiastic rites were more the exoteric manifestation, with the esoteric making that seem tame, at least with regards to the Drakaina or "dragoness" priestesses of the initiatory mysteries, their pharmakon, and the rites of hieros gamos, which was basically the old spiritual technology.

>Whether the Phrygians of Apostolic times actually saw all these sublime ideas underlying the religion of their country may be doubted; but it is fairly certain that at the time in question there was worshipped throughout Anatolia a divine family comprising a goddess known as the Mother of the Gods, together with a male deity, who was at once her son, her spouse, her brother, and sometimes her father. The worship of this pair, who were in the last resort considered as one bisexual being, was celebrated in the form of festivals and mystery-plays like those of the Middle Ages, in which the birth, nuptials, death, and resurrection of the divinities were acted in dramatic form. At these festivals, the worshippers gave themselves up to religious excitement alternating between continence sometimes carried to the extent of self-mutilation on the part of the men, and hysterical or religious prostitution on the part of the women.

The gathering of foreign merchants and slaves in the Anatolian cities, and the constant shifting of their inhabitants by their successive masters, had forced on the votaries of these Phrygian deities a theocrasia of the most complete kind, and the Phrygian god and goddess were in turn identified with the deities of Eleusis, of whom indeed they may have been the prototypes, with the Syrian Aphrodite and Adonis, with the Egypto-Greek Serapis and Isis, and probably with many Oriental deities as well. At the same time, their fame and their worship had spread far beyond Phrygia. The primitive statue of the goddess of Pessinus, a black stone or baetyl dignified by the name of the Mother of the Gods, was transported to Rome in the stress of the Second Punic War and there became the centre of a ritual served by eunuch priests supported by the State; while, later, her analogue, the Syrian goddess, whose temple at Hierapolis, according to Lucian, required a personnel of over three hundred ministrants, became the object of the special devotion of the Emperor Nero. As with the Alexandrian divinities, the respect paid to these stranger deities by the legions carried their worship into every part of the Roman world.

Guy goes mask off for a moment and gives a glimpse of just how weird these "people" are, not that we didn't know.

>The Hive must be maintained at all costs, and anything that threatens to break up the hive must be regarded with suspicion, as Evil. Not all Catholics are Roman Catholics, it is true, but not all people care to prop up Roman Catholics, and should not be condemned for regarding them as bearing the lion's share of culpability in an Ideological War that has been in progress since the Pauline and Petrine churches began, by people who are trapped in their own semantic prisons. Hastings'Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics, s.v., Ophitism, tells us:

>"It is impossible to ignore the strong affinities between the Ophite doctrines and those of the pagan sects which are known to us through the Hermetic literature. These sects were probably pre-Christian, and were certainly anterior to the emergence of historical Gnosticism. ... In spite of occasional details which suggest the influence of the great Gnostic schools, we have scarcely a trace in Ophitism of their more characteristic developments - e.g., the aeonology, the fall of Sophia. If the Ophite myths had arisen from a re-combination of the larger systems, these features would almost certainly have found a prominent place.

>We have less to do today with ensuring good herds or crops, but the rites exist and they ensure what is important to us for our existence. Perhaps the fact that our food supply is what it is, should be telling us something about the laxity in practice that exists today. Today we don't need a dying savior because we have grown up, or some of us at least, and have saved ourselves. And that is exactly what the Law of Thelema sets out to do.

Obviously the Asherah poles had serpents draped on them, serpent and tree.

>In the biblical Books of Kings, the Nehushtan is the bronze image of a serpent on a pole. The image is described in the Book of Numbers, where Yahweh instructed Moses to erect it so that the Israelites who saw it would be cured and be protected from dying from the bites of the "fiery serpents", which Yahweh had sent to punish them for speaking against him and Moses. According to 2 Kings 18:4, King Hezekiah instituted an iconoclastic reform: Kings 18:4 He removed the high places, and broke the images, and cut down the Asherah poles, and broke in pieces the brazen serpent that Moses had made; for until those days the children of Israel had been offering sacrifices to it; and it was called Nehushtan [a bronze sculpture]" Historical findings have also shown that the utilization of bronze serpents was not unique. In several Canaanite cities there were discoveries of the cultic use of these objects. It may have represented traces of an older practice associated with medicine and healing, that was also not restricted to the Levant

The association missing from these articles on pharmakon is human sacrifice. These rites are cast in taboo sexual terms without noting hellish torture, murder, and gratuitous bloodshed, which are dealt with in separate articles, but they were not.

"Incritical theory, pharmakon is a concept introduced by Jacques Derrida. It is derived from the Greek source term φάρμακον (phármakon), a word that can mean either remedy or poison. The term is closely related to pharmakos, which means ritual of human sacrifice"

>The origins of ancient Mediterranean pharmacy and the role of snake-derived venoms in pre-Hippocratic medicine are poorly understood. An analysis of ancient Greek and Latin written sources within the context of the native technical vocabularies employed by ancient priestesses and physicians reveals the existence and practice of a sophisticated polyvalent pharmacy in which human health was maintained and modified by the administration of viperid venoms and "antidotes" developed in the bodies of priestesses and initiates. Medico-religious practices, involving the use of venoms and their antidotes are traceable to a single late Bronze Age priestess, a Colchian named Medea, whose pharmaceutical experimentation with venoms, toxic botanicals, fungi, and antidotes informed both pagan and Christian mystery religions and established the Western religious concept of communion.

Medea came from the Echidnaic Priesthood, the priestesses were called Drakaina.

"And in a hollow cave she bore another monster, irresistible, in no wise like either to mortal men or to the undying gods, even the goddess fierce Echidna who is half a nymph with glancing eyes and fair cheeks, and half again a huge snake, great and awful, with speckled skin, eating raw flesh beneath the secret parts of the holy earth. And there she has a cave deep down under a hollow rock far from the deathless gods and mortal men.

There, then, did the gods appoint her a glorious house to dwell in: and she keeps guard in Arima beneath the earth, grim Echidna, a nymph who dies not nor grows old all her days."

>THE DRAKAINA SKYTHIA (Scythian Dracaena) was the first ruler of the land of Skythia. She was a woman from the waist up with the tail of a serpent in place of legs. When Herakles was travelling through her realm with the cattle of Geryon, she stole some of the herd and insisted the hero mate with her before she would return them. He did so and through her became the ancestor of a line of Skythian kings.

>The Skythian Drakaina may have identified with the monster Ekhidna who was sometimes placed in the Skythian land of Arimoi. The Drakaina's story is undoubtedly a Greek translation of an old Skythian myth. Her serpentine form, the birthing of the first men, and the title "Hora" (Season) all suggest she was an indigenous earth-goddess.

When pharaoh crossed the duat seeking immortality there was 7, 12, or 21 gates and their guardians that needed to be passed, these were generally lesser gods with freaky names that needed to be memorised, along with secret directions. As a method the marcosian mentioned earlier seems more promising, becoming invisible to all archonic minions and bypassing their tests and judgements.

>TheBook of Gatesdescribes 12 gates, each named after a goddess and serving as architectural and divine barriers. Chapter 144 of theBook of the Deadmentions seven gates, each with a god, a doorkeeper, and a herald. For instance, the seventh gate is protected by the god “Sharpest of Them All,” the doorkeeper “Strident of Voice,” and the herald “Rejector of Rebels.”

>Other texts describe 21 portals within the “Mansion of Osiris in the Field of Reeds,” each guarded by zoomorphic deities wielding menacing knives. These gates bore evocative names like “Mistress of Anger – Dancing on Blood” or gentler ones like “Mistress of the Altar.” The guardians also had fearsome names, such as “Swallower of Sinners” and “Existing on Maggots,” emphasizing their role as enforcers of divine justice.

Again the emphasis on language, flying free of the demiurges reincarnation trap is obviously not going to be as easy as “just don't go into the light”. The interconnection between the physical and spiritual worlds mentioned is interesting, that what you understand here translates. A lot of what the Egyptians did seems to be installing a subconscious framework that maps onto the duat, a story you tell yourself, and the path appears.

>Entry required the soul to recite the secret name of the guardian deity, akin to providing a password. This symbolic exchange reflected the importance of knowledge and the power of language in navigating the afterlife.

>The gate deities and their guardians symbolize the challenges faced by the soul in the afterlife and the triumph of knowledge, morality, and divine favor. The gates represent both physical and spiritual barriers, ensuring that only the righteous and knowledgeable could pass. The guardians, with their terrifying appearances and powerful names, underscore the dangers and trials of the journey.

>The detailed descriptions of these gates and their guardians also reflect the Egyptians’ belief in the interconnection between the physical and spiritual worlds. By equipping the deceased with the knowledge of these deities’ names and functions, the funerary texts served as guides, ensuring a safe passage and ultimate union with the divine.

Thinking I'll still call archetypes in the old manner when needed or risk being cut off from them, then analyse in search of archetypical core and dissolve the form and whatever associated weirdness (δ) similar to later phase Tibetan deity practice. Tend to take things literally and just put solar and lunar in no good demiurge basket (with some attributes still inadvertently attached), not what was meant I know. But yeah purify distortions of δ to increase χ and find archetypical core, rather than throw out baby with bathwater.

>Matter comes from the Latin mater, which means mother. Pattern comes from the Latin patronus, which comes from pater, which means father. From these two archetypal ideas, we can deduce the association of masculinity with order, reason, logic, and form, while the feminine is associated with the cyclical forces of nature, change, temporality, and matter. Matter is divided and in constant flux, yet it mysteriously continues to interact with immutable, universal mathematical ideals. Pattern, order, and form are an integral part of beauty and will always impress and inform matter. Similarly, the chaotic destruction of matter will ultimately always submit to the power of order.

>There is no Sophia, BTW. There are no female aeons; the beauty and grace of "women" in our world come from aspects of the divine Nous that are literally grace and beauty, and they externalize this because they are lunar. I've been thinking about how Batman is a draconian figure in disguise...

>the ears resemble horns >clear association with Dracula >bat symbol as in Spanish heraldry >association of the bat with the dragon >jewish origin of the character

Nice strawman arguments. Why would I make an astroturf general? Im not a glowtard.

But yeah, focusing on a minor egyptian chapter pf the "donkey god" and making a disjointed wikipedia "general" has definitely purified the solar aryan current of demiurgy.

Not larp at all. Pat yourself on the back. Good job! Five swastikas! I look forward to the next riveting installment of shill god wiki general.

Been looking at the Pied Piper of Hamelin and missing 411 correlation with cave systems.

>Mary, hear us, for your Son denies you nothing. 1284 is that year when members of both sexes languish (through weakness), the year of the day John and Paul, which the 130 dear children of Hamelin swept away and not without doom. It is said that Calvary swallowed them alive. Christ, protect the guilty so that no similar evil fate overtake them.

>Calvary at the time was identified with the mouth of hell which was believed to swallow sinners.

>He had a silver pipe of strange design and began to play upon it as he passed through the town. And all the boys (or children) who heard that pipe, about 130 in number, followed him through the eastern gate, bound as for Calvary

>The Devil's Kitchen (Teufelsküche) near summit of the Ithberg is a level basin-like structure scooped in the rocks and full of boulders strewn around as though shaken by the De'el himself. This was reportedly the site of human sacrifices or at least occult events in the past, some of them even after the introduction of Christianity

>He assured me that the Koppen mentioned in the legend was none other than the dark mountain of eerie head-like rocky outcrops. It transpired that these had been carved by human hand in megalithic times, about eight thousand years ago. Heads of the kind found on the Ithberg have been discovered throughout Europe and catalogued by Dr. Elisabeth Neumann-Gundrum. Typical of these is the appearance of a blind or vacant eye signifying inner vision. They also show the faces of humans and animals emerging from the mouth or head of a larger figure. They exhibit what appears to be astral signs including the hexagram

>Count Nikolaus of Spiegelberg with the help of his two younger brothers, in order to get into the good books of the Church and civil dignitaries, organized a massacre of youthful miscreants execrated as dancing devil- worshippers who allegedly performed forbidden rites on the Koppenberg.

Just happened to be the 33rd.

>But back to the subject at hand: the idea that Bruce Wayne is an Eli is backed up by two pieces of intriguing "evidence." The first chronologically is a short 1966 video clip from the 33rd episode of the Batman TV show that starred Adam West. (It is readily accessible on YouTube; run a search on "Batman Skull and Bones.")

>Films are littered with piper themes. The Child catcher in Chitty Chitty Bang Bang is an interesting piper type figure. When he tempts the children into his wheeled cage, the symbolism is literally screaming out at you. There are sunflowers, symbolising Leo , purple diamond shapes, alternating light and dark and more purple and white striped canvas. Purple is the colour of royalty which derives originally from the power of the menses 'blood of purple hue'. Diamonds are the jewel of Taurus. There is a joker/court jester on the side of the cage between two pillars and when the child catcher sets off with his haul, the pillars which cover two corners of the vehicle collapse and the whole external cover of the vehicle comes off so just the bars of the cage are now visible with the children inside. This seems like collapse of the temple into manifestation. Revelation begun again.

Literal jew nose put on him.

>They elected Salatis as king, who fortified the city of Avaris out of fear of the Assyrians.

>The term "Hyksos" means Shepherd Kings (Hyc = King, Sos = Shepherd).

A controversial fragment associates the origin of the Israelites with a group of "unclean" or leprous Egyptians.

>King Amenophis desired to see the gods and was advised to cleanse the land of lepers.

>Around 80,000 people were sent to work in quarries and were later permitted to inhabit the deserted city of Avaris.

>They chose as their leader a priest from Heliopolis named Osarsiph, who established laws contrary to Egyptian customs, forbidding the worship of the gods and ordering the killing of sacred animals.

>Osarsiph allied with the expelled Hyksos (who were in Jerusalem) to invade Egypt, forcing King Amenophis to flee to Ethiopia for 13 years.

>Osarsiph changed his name to Moses upon assuming leadership of this people. Eventually, Amenophis and his son Sethos returned and expelled the group to the borders of Syria.

the little book of heracles

one of the most unique books in the eastern sphere written by a student of one of very few people to actually put in the work to learn a system without mindlessly following it and actually keep searching out new stuff. while still keeping to the oriental pool its one of very few books to even broach the topic of distinct stages of spiritual attainment and physical symptoms arising from such especially since buddhism in particular actively suppresses the physical in its own teachings. its a rambling mess but you would be hard pressed to find much else on the topic

the body electric by robert becker its more or less a secular rediscovery of the principles of qi and a good introductory to the weird science part of the occult where western science is actually finding this stuff is real the reality of this knowing suppression can be enlightening to skeptics who actually seek truth and sobering to the love and light crowd who expect figuring this stuff out to make everything rainbows and sunshine you can find more of this stuff in auras, electroculture, grounding and some magnet book thats similar I'm forgetting. has the problem of a lot of western stuff that its far more theory than figuring out what to do this kind of stuff.

anatomy trains

myofascia routes through the body similar to meridians its a redesign of fitness that might be useful for trying to refine meridians as far as what the actual paths in the body are and how to mess with them to what ends

Two Lines of Lineage

There is an interesting and subtle reference to the two lines of genealogy, mentioned in the Torah. There is the קין, or Cain line, and there is the שת, or Seth line.

At the end of Parshat Bereishit, the Torah tells us that בני האלוקים, literally, the Sons of G-d, saw the בנות האדם, the daughters of man. They saw that they were good, meaning, attractive, and they took them as wives, even if they were already married.

The Seth descendants, were referred to as, "Sons of G-d," and the Cain line, were referred to as, "Sons of G-d." The Torah does tell us that Cain married and fathered children. He married his twin sister, and because of murdering his brother, his descendants were tainted. They were not considered pious men, and the seventh generation, had Lemech, accidentally, kill Cain. There was also a Chanoch in this line, who was not considered anything special.

The Seth line, on the other hand, was more pure. He was Adam's third son, who was not tarnished. His descendant Chanoch, "walked with G-d," and was taken from this earth, at a relatively young age. There was also a second Lemech, that descended from Seth. He was the father of Noach.

The Kuzari wrote that each generation, had only one worthy offspring. This is the one mentioned in the Torah. The other siblings of that generation, were also considered not particularly special. The first person who had completely righteous offspring, was our father, Yaakov. Because all of his twelve sons were righteous, they were worthy to become a Family nation.

The Cain line did not survive, and the Seth line, ultimately, produced the Jewish people.

Examining the Real Egyptian History of the Hyksos, the Hebrews and the Exodus

April 30, 2025 Russ Winter Articles by Russ Winter, Hidden History, Winter Watch

The usual suspects took a tremendous amount of license with the story of the Hyksos, the Hebrews and the Exodus. The real story is hidden in plain sight.

There were large populations of Hebrews in Egypt during the reign of the Hyksos (1782-1570 B.C.), after the Hyksos and through to the entire Hellenic and Roman eras.

Roman historian Tacitus (56–120 A.D.) wrote of the Jews:

“[They] are said to have been refugees from the island of Crete who settled in the remotest corner of Libya. This is a deduction from the name Judaei by which they became known: the word is to be regarded as a barbarous lengthening of Idaei, the name of the people dwelling around the famous Mount Ida in Crete. There are some who say that a motley collection of landless Assyrians occupied a part of Egypt and then built cities of their own.”

Winter Watch takeaway: The Assyrian theory seems well supported. The Hyksos were a mysterious “Asiatic” Semitic tribe that invaded Egypt in 1782 B.C. and ruled until 1570 B.C. Then the Egyptians from Upper Egypt reunited the country and overthrew Hyksos rule. There is an active debate as to whether these were early Hebrew tribes. We say they were. Some would offer a red herring that these were two separate Semite tribes.

But at the very minimum they were strongly associated merged cousins at the same time and place.

Modern Egyptologists no longer describe Hyksos as military conquerors but rather infiltrators.

The Hyksos were characterized as “smart, pushy and rude.” Most likely, they were traders and merchants who were at first welcomed at the northeastern Egyptian city of Avaris. Their specialty was livestock. The Hyksos prospered in the Nile Delta and sent word to their friends and family to come join them. What resulted was a large population of Hyksos/Hebrews. They were eventually able to exert political control and then military power over Lower Egypt. The nation was split in two.

Map of ancient Egypt (c. 3150 B.C. to 30 B.C.) via Wikipedia, subject to GNU agreement. MAP: Colorado State University

The city of Avaris (a Greek name) provided access to the Mediterranean Sea and, overland routes, to the region of Syria-Levant. The Hyksos (early Hebrews) thus established a rich and brisk trade in goods and people in the larger region. Avaris become one of the most important cities of the age.

The Bible offers clues as to what really transpired there and the role played by Hebrews in positions of power.

Are the Old Testament’s accounts of Abraham and his cohort showing up in Egypt during the rise of the Hyksos merely a coincidence?

And the story of Joseph follows in the same place and general timeline. Genesis 41 describes how, in 1670 B.C., Joseph, a Semite Hebrew, became Vizier to the Hyksos Pharaoh, who was also a Semite.

The following biblical passages from the book of Genesis regarding Joseph are “ones for the ages.” The Hebrew Joseph was directly involved as a bankster and “economic hit man” for the Hyksos pharaoh regime’s hoarding, arbitrage, debt-enslavement and land grabs. The term “bought” is used rather than the actual operation taking place, which was a mass foreclosure. What a revealing biblical account of a nasty piece of work. Read carefully! Note that the “he” referred to in the following passages is Grand Vizier Joseph.

Read “The Parasite Guild: Part I”

Read “Countering the Parasite Guild: Part II”

So he gathered all the food of these seven years which occurred in the land of Egypt and placed the food in the cities; he placed in every city the food from its own surrounding fields. GEN 41:48

Now there was no food in all the land, because the famine was very severe, so that the land of Egypt and the land of Canaan languished because of the famine. GEN 47:13

Joseph gathered all the money that was found in the land of Egypt and in the land of Canaan for the grain which they bought, and Joseph brought the money into Pharaoh's house. GEN 47:14

When the money was all spent in the land of Egypt and in the land of Canaan, all the Egyptians came to Joseph and said, "Give us food, for why should we die in your presence? For our money is gone." GEN 47:15

Then Joseph said, "Give up your livestock, and I will give you food for your livestock, since your money is gone." GEN 47:16

When that year was ended, they came to him the next year and said to him, "We will not hide from my lord that our money is all spent, and the cattle are my lord's. There is nothing left for my lord except our bodies and our lands. GEN 47:18

"Why should we die before your eyes, both we and our land? Buy us and our land for food, and we and our land will be slaves to Pharaoh. So give us seed, that we may live and not die, and that the land may not be desolate." GEN 47:19

So Joseph bought all the land of Egypt for Pharaoh, for every Egyptian sold his field, because the famine was severe upon them. Thus the land became Pharaoh's. GEN 47:20

Then Joseph said to the people, "Behold, I have today bought you and your land for Pharaoh; now, here is seed for you, and you may sow the land. GEN 47:21

Genesis 46 describes how in 1660 B.C., the large Hebrew clan of Jacob (Joseph's long-lost, estranged brother) moves into the richest part of the Nile Delta, called Goshen, at the invitation of the "Hyksos" — sheer coincidence. Avaris is in the heart of Goshen. In recent years, it has been excavated and contains remains of Semite foreigners and articles, not natives.

David Rohl lecture – Finding Israelites in Goshen Egypt at Avaris

Next, we learn that the Hebrews "were not known or welcome" after their Hyksos tribes fell from power around 1570 B.C. Ultimately, the natives booted them out of power and supposedly obliterated any memory or sign of them. The story goes that nobody had any idea where they went. Really? What a screwy and false narrative.

The Hebrews on the other hand, as the Joseph verses show, were intimately “connected” to the Hyksos pharaoh and were still in Egypt over 100 years later. Moses, who the Bible says lived 130 years (probably as folk etymology, meaning the House of Moses or some powerful proto-Hebrew family), was a political official of Pharaoh Hatshepsut (1507–1458 B.C., ruled 1478-1458 B.C.). Indeed, the Bible tells us that this female pharaoh “found baby Moses by the river” and raised him as her own. That would be roughly 1490 B.C.

Cartoon World History: Future Pharaoh Hatshepsut just so happens to find baby Moses by the river and adopts him. Moses is set.

Sure, some lowly Hebrews were undoubtedly put to hard work for a period after the Hyksos were driven from power. This was also a fast-growing population. Plus, there were other “Asiatics” coming in. Yes, they were looked down upon by the Egyptian/Hyksos autocrats. But at the aristocrat level, Egyptians wouldn’t just throw away Hyksos/Hebrew institutional knowledge on trade, contacts/networks and skills in the livestock business. They would merge it. The Hyksos, for all practical purposes, were the Hebrews.

The other aspect of the Exodus that doesn’t combine was the notion of “fleeing the Egyptians” — or the persecution narrative. The Exodus is dated to around 1446 B.C., give or take a few years. The problem with the Exodus victimhood narrative is that the entire Levant and Judea had been already been conquered by Pharaoh Thutmose III. The Battle of Megiddo, a victory by Egyptian forces over Canaanites, was placed on April 16, 1457 B.C., according to the Middle Chronology.

Besides the plethora of impossible, miraculous Exodus details — like the parting of a sea — is that when the Hebrews arrived in the Promised Land, they would have encountered an Egyptian occupation army and presence. Egypt ruled and militarily occupied the Levant (as shown on the map at left) until 1100 B.C.

Egypt at that time suffered from a series of famines and pestilence that are mentioned in the Book of Exodus. But the reasons were overpopulation and lack of resources, not divine intervention and retribution only on Egyptians. All people were impacted, thus the need for conquering and resettling the Levant.

So, in actuality, the Exodus was an organized colonization Lebensstrom operation in conjunction with the Egyptians. A real or figurative Moses and Pharaoh Thutmose III cut a win-win deal. This large-scale resettlement would have taken place in stages over several decades. Nor would the Judaic religion simply evolve in one day on a mountain top. It would have taken a few centuries after the Levant resettlement process.

The Book of Exodus — even as fabricated and mean-spirited as it is — in passage

12:37-39 makes it quite clear that the Hebrew settlers were far from being “slaves,” they were well-provisioned, and they included mixed ancestry of “other peoples.” The Exodus passage couldn’t be more clear that this was an Egyptian settlement of the Egyptian-occupied Levant:

The Israelites set out from Rameses for Succoth, about six hundred thousand men on foot, not counting the children. A crowd of mixed ancestry also went up with them, with livestock in great abundance, both flocks and herds. The dough they had brought out of Egypt they baked into unleavened loaves.

When the Hebrew Jews (formerly Hyksos) arrived in the Levant after the “exodus,” there were no Canaanites left to defeat – only subjugate and exterminate. The area was already a client state of Egypt.

Josephus identifies the Israelite exodus with the first exodus mentioned by the Greco-Egyptian priest Manetho, when some 480,000 Hyksos “shepherd kings” left Egypt for Jerusalem. This was 125 years after the Hyksos fell from rule. But did the Hyksos (Hebrews) just immediately pack up and completely leave Egypt, or did some — or even most — just meld into society and stay? Three centuries after the arrival of biblical “Abraham,” they had already melded in or were Egyptianized.

And what of a second Exodus identified by Apion, when a renegade Egyptian priest called Osarseph led 80,000 “lepers” to rebel against Egypt? The Greco-Egyptian source Manetho alleges that this heretic priest changed his name to Moses. Most scholars do not interpret lepers and leprous priests as literally referring to a disease but rather to a strange and unwelcome new belief system. This second exodus date was set at around 1260 B.C.

Manetho specifically identified the Hebrews with the Hyksos and Moses as those “who had been harming the population of Egypt.”

According to Lysimachus of Alexandria, “The Jewish nation stems from the impure and undesirable elements who had been expelled from Egyptian society. Their leader, Moses, taught them to hate all mankind, and their opposition to the temples of other nations typifies their entire approach.”

Indeed, even after two exoduses, classic historian Theodor Mommsen states that “in the first century A.D. there were no fewer than 1,000,000 Jews still in Egypt out of a total of 8,000,000 Egyptian inhabitants. 200,000 Jews lived in Alexandria, whose total population was 500,000.”

Where did this large toehold come from?

The answer: Many never left Egypt, and there was continual two-way traffic from the Levant.

The Hebrew Bible records that a large number of Judeans took refuge in Egypt after the destruction of the Kingdom of Judah in 597 B.C. (2 Kings 25:22-24, Jeremiah 40:6-8). In Josephus' history, it's claimed that, after the first Ptolemy took Judea, he led some 120,000 Jewish captives to Egypt. Josephus also claims that, soon after, these 120,000 captives were freed of their bondage by Philadelphus.

The Jews in Hellenic Alexandria enjoyed a great degree of political independence up until Trajan and The Revolts. In reality, the Jews in Egypt fared well and certainly enjoyed a degree of influence.

Adolf Harnack (Ausbreitung des Christentums, Leipzig, 1902) estimates that there were a million Jews in Syria (which included Lebanon) and the areas east of the Euphrates at the time of Nero in 60 AD. He puts the 700,000 in Judea as a small minority of the total.

Tacitus wrote that Jerusalem at its fall contained 600,000 persons. This was during Passover, so likely it included pilgrims from the entire region.

The Census of David puts the number of exiles who returned from Babylon at only 42,360. The real story was Egypt.

In general, the Jewish population of the era was actually quite large, making up a substantial percentage of the Middle Eastern world going into the common era, and they spread out as well. The scattered tribes of Israel narrative makes a lot of sense. As a people, they promoted large families and ample offspring.

Tacitus may have had the Crete connection nailed as well. Jews have lived on Greek islands long before the Second Temple era and the time of Alexander the Great.

Tacitus picked up on a similar misanthropic narrative on the outcast segment of the Jews as Manetho, Lysimachus and others:

"Most authorities, however, agree on the following account. The whole of Egypt was once plagued by a wasting disease which caused bodily disfigurement. So pharaoh Bocchoris (Greek for Bakenranef, ruled 718 to 712 B.C.) went to the oracle of Hammon to ask for a cure, and was told to purify his kingdom by expelling the victims to other lands, as they lay under a divine curse. Thus a multitude of sufferers was rounded up, herded together, and abandoned in the wilderness."

So here around 715 BC we have yet another "exodus."

Note: The emphasis was on a multitude of "disease sufferers" (aka malcontents), many of whom were not even Judaic. So a group, including non-Jews, was expelled but clearly not all. Ancient Egypt had a long-standing and regular practice for a millennium of expulsion of all manner of troublemakers into "the wilderness," meaning outside the cities.

Tacitus continues:

“Here the exiles tearfully resigned themselves to their fate. But one of them, who was called Moses, urged his companions not to wait passively for help from god or man, for both had deserted them: they should trust to their own initiative and to whatever guidance first helped them to extricate themselves from their present plight. They agreed, and started off at random into the unknown.

“But exhaustion set in, chiefly through lack of water, and the level plain was already strewn with the bodies of those who had collapsed and were at their last gasp when a herd of wild asses left their pasture and made for the spade of a wooded crag. Moses followed them and was able to bring to light a number of abundant channels of water whose presence he had deduced from a grassy patch of ground. This relieved their thirst. They traveled on for six days without a break, and on the seventh they expelled the previous inhabitants of Canaan, took over their lands and in them built a holy city and temple.”

Note: The Greek Strabo (64 – 24 A.D.) also described Moses as an Egyptian priest. The Greco-Egyptians and Romans in general had a positive take on Moses. After all, he was partnered and aligned with two pharaohs: Thutmose III and Hatshepsut. However, most accounts state the tribe degenerated afterward.

“Strabo expresses his complete approval of this polity and adds that for some time Moses’ successors continued to live according to his constitution and were truly just and God-fearing. However, in the course of time the priesthood – which among the Jews encompassed the political power as well – fell into the hands of superstitious men, and after them in the hands of those who had despotic leanings. The superstitions which were introduced gave rise to the Jewish laws concerning forbidden foods, circumcision, and the like. The tyranny engendered robbery and violence, and large portions of Syria and Phoenicia were subjugated by the Jews.”

Like the earlier Greco-Egyptian sources, Tacitus picks up on inversion of morals and in-group preferential treatments and, in general, finds them distasteful.

“Moses prescribed for them a novel religion quite different from those of the rest of mankind. Among the Jews all things are profane that we hold sacred; on the other hand they regard as permissible what seems to us immoral. The Jewish belief is paradoxical and degraded.

“The other practices of the Jews are sinister and revolting, and have entrenched themselves by their very wickedness. Wretches of the most abandoned kind who had no use for the religion of their fathers took to contributing dues and free-will offerings to swell the Jewish exchequer; and other reasons for their increasing wealth may be found in their stubborn loyalty and ready benevolence toward brother Jews.

“But the rest of the world they confront with the hatred reserved for enemies. They will not feed or intermarry with gentiles. Though a most lascivious people, the Jews avoid sexual intercourse with women of alien race. Among themselves nothing is barred. They have introduced the practice of circumcision to show that they are different from others. Proselytes to Jewry adopt the same practices, and the very first lesson they learn is to despise the gods, shed all feelings of patriotism, and consider parents, children and brothers as readily expendable. However, the Jews see to it that their numbers increase.”

Too funny that the city they congregated in early was named “Avaris” You must have gotten a chuckle from that. Any link to the modern definition of “Avarice”? If so, how fitting.

Josephus identifies Hyksos as present day Jews. Avaris was slowly inhabited by Canaanites. Are Hyksos Canaanites? Aren't Canaanites and Philistines known as the enemy of Israel? Aren't present day Palestinians and Jews genetically related? Here is a quote about Hyksos from givemehistory.com:

‘Their main gods were Baal and Anat, originally of Phoenician and Canaanite origins. The Hyksos came to associate Baal with Egypt’s Set’. Set-an versus Is-Ra-El

These books shouldn't even be displayed in the Christian Bible. After the "mixed multitude" went to the promised land, they needed to create a "God" as a Jewish judge, so as to justify all the misanthropic crap they pull on the world. Yahweh is nothing more than the "God" of ultra-violence and supremacist Jewry. Yahweh is anti-human, pro-Jew. Yahweh is in reality Satan.

However, there are the video and physical evidences of the exodus discovered this century by the likes of Larry Williams and that guy from Tennessee who found Noah's ark and Moses' Ark of the covenant. Again video, photographic and verified scientific evidence that exists today. Your textual criticism is built on scant evidence and conjecture unfortunately for your case. I'm not impressed!

Your story here does fit the narrative of the Ashkenazi. We all appreciate that! The swindler Jacob was not a good character indeed. Joseph, however, was a virtuous in more ways than one. Debt slavery was common and accepted as a just trade-off for material support. It is the same today really. Not remarkable in the ancient context. I think you are stretching heavily here. I like some of your other stuff but now I am beginning to question even that after such a poor treatment of this subject matter. Sorry Russ.

Wonderful account, thank you. Indeed, Egypt is the spiritual home of the west, which is why the deranged Illuminati constantly apes and degrades the culture. The left and right eyes of Horus. The pyramid is universally abhorred and set before the masses to scoff at, as the magical system of Elohim is used freely by their enemies in destruction of their children. Egypt was the progenitor of the Greek culture and pantheon and brought to life in the finest traditions of chivalry among many other attempts at regaining a foothold, and the famed stone of scone no doubt either from Egypt or magnetized by a high print. As Isaiah says (there being two major writers of that book) Egypt is my people.

Lots of problems with the article, but I think one of the main ones is why? Why would the Egyptians need Moses to invent a totally new religion? If Hyksos migration really was about lebensraum then it would make more sense to have the Egyptian colonists keep Egyptian culture.

They were a tribe that left Egypt proper and over several centuries into the end of the Bronze Age and the eventual departure of Egyptian control created a new society in Levant. Don't think in static or permanent terms- by 1100 BC it was Israel, not Egypt although the influences lingered on.

Russ, I will have to disagree with you. I find it difficult to believe that what your article describes as the ruling tribe of Egypt decided to change their religion in order to expand into a smaller and less powerful demise, even under political pressure. I think your article is very well written and argued, but that the facts are not sufficient to support your conclusion. Also I am surprised your article doesn't mention the forgotten Egyptian religion of Aten.

Full disclosure I am a Christian I believe that the OT as recorded faithfully.

Read the timeline carefully and avoid being static as if conditions weren't changing. This transpired over several centuries.

The Hyksos/Hebrews were not the ruling class after 1570 BC. Afterwards only SOME of the leadership were functionaries of the Egyptians when they resumed power in Lower Egypt. The Hyksos/Hebrews (and other "multitudes") plebs were just excess population that Egypt periodically had to deal with. They did that multiple times over a millennium via colonization aka Exoduses.

Full disclosure I am a Christian and believe that the OT is a hedge-podge of real history, spun history and mythology.

No- Hyksos were settled in waves in Lower Egypt nearly 400-500 years earlier. Sea People attacked in 1208 and 1175 BC. They played a role in further destabilizing the region and toward the collapse of the Bronze Age empires. This put many peoples into motion all over the eastern Med.

Thanks for this great study in anthropology, I'm always looking for discussion regarding this topic, hard to find, as the MSM usually hides the identity of these people. This one is good.
The Hyksos were one of several tribes, Neanderthals mainly, who showed up in the Middle East out of the Caucasuses and the Black Sea areas and flooded areas, to become the Semites, Hittites, Hebrews, Khazars, identity thieves and so on, bringing with them (along with their unique facial and physical features) a deeper hatred of the other humans they encountered.
It's the source of the many events troubling mankind ever since.

Since this is a thread that has been brought back with some excellent comments and links on prior runs, I will not try to add to the scholarly work of other posts that stand very well on their own (nothing that I could add would be nearly as good or novel in any way). Therefore, I am going to move a little sideways and inquire:

With regard to the Stone of Scone, Stone of Destiny, Jacob's Pillar Stone, you know the one that resides under the Coronation Chair, does anyone else question the links of the stone to Egypt and more specifically Jews who were cast out of the region?

Further, do we think those Jews may have transported the stone through Greece, to Spain, then to Ireland, then to Scotland and finally to England where it (subtly) symbolizes the connection between the British royal line and a Jewish ancestry (possibly the Hyskos kings, as indicated by the thread, and / or prominent Jewish families in the region at the time)?

Many thanks to any and all who might be able to provide me with some further insight / understanding.

All my best,

Jacob's Pillar is Israelite and Hyksos are Canaanite.

Okay, thank you. Yet if the stone was brought out of Egypt because the Hyksos permitted a transfer by a Jewish family, then would this origin story be relatively feasible?

What I am trying to understand is if the stone could have originated in Egypt? Sorry for any confusion on my part.

The term 'Jew' should NEVER be applied to the Biblical Israelites, any of whom are found in either the Old Testament or New Testament.

The appellation of Jew should only be applied to the Sephardim, Ashkenazim or of those Edomites of the AD 70 diaspora/The Siege of Jerusalem and their descendants comprising a portion of today's modern Jews. Using the word 'Jew' as any sort of biblical term or reference usually only causes confusion when distinguishing real Israelites in the Bible from the "others".

Referring to the New Testament (originally written in Koine Greek), wherever the word Jew is found, its an incorrect translation which does not belong anywhere in the Scriptures. One example being this, "What advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there of circumcision?" It should read "...then hath the Judean", from the Greek loudaiou. A more literal translation would be more like "What advantage then hath THE of_Judah." Notice again the Greek word louda-iou. Remove the grammatical ending -iou and you have louda, or Judah, not "Jew." The Greek word loudaios properly translated to Judean in English should never be translated as "Jew".

By extension, Rev 3:9, should be properly read and understood as follows: "Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of Satan, which say they are Judeans (Greek: 'louδᾱῖος > loudaios, i.e., "THE of_Judah" or those of Judah), and are not, but do lie; behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee. "

I hope my explanation was not too detailed and removes some confusion regarding the misapplication of the term jew where it does not belong.

Bottom line: Today's Jews are absolutely not the descendants of the Biblical Israelites nor are they Hebrews.

The following links should leave no doubt as to their identity.

Either way, neither one of you answered my original question. You did prove that with a lot more time on your hands than I have that you could call me out on language; however, my question about the stone still stands and neither of you utilized your vast intellects to even address it. Instead you focused on me, which seems to negate the point of me posing a simple, thoughtful, question. An addition to this thread that was meant to include everyone, instead of shut them down.

Well fine; the lecture was fascinating and I hope you both feel like big men for reciting the common tropes that anyone can easily find on the web or by viewing YouTube.

In review, I did not use the term "Jew" or Jewish" to mean folks who may have transported the stone out of Egypt incorrectly with the information provided in the thread if you go back and read both the entire writing provided by Mr. Winter and then the context of my post.

We were speaking of "Jewish" folks, not Israelites in the Biblical meaning; hence, you have both decided to respond to me without a clear understanding of all that was contained in the work. Perhaps you were rushing too in your writings.

From my end, I forgive you both, without reservation. May God bless you each of you and keep you well.

My apologies, I only meant for my comment above to serve in addressing the incorrect usage, by all, of the term jew or jewish when identifying anything to do with the biblical Israelites. I did not intend to single you out.

My concern is that readers will continue to believe and allow jews to usurp the identity of ancient Israelites, which corresponds to the hidden heritage of many White Europeans and Whites of European heritage.

For instance, the Welsh Gaelic, particularly Old Welsh, uses many words identical or cognate to Paleo Hebrew. How is that?

Anyhow, in hopes of answering your question, read "JACOB'S PILLAR Stone of Destiny" by E. Raymond Capt. It might have some of the answers for which you're looking regarding the "Stone of Scone".

P.S. One interesting Egyptian connection lies in the fact that one of the historic formal names of Ireland was Scotia [Major] and Scotland was referred to as Scotia Minor. The connection, here, being that the ethnically identifying term of Scota or Scoti, rather than a personal name, refers to the nickname, or possibly the title held, of an Egyptian princess, which figures into the legendary history of the Gaels, whose royal patriarch was Gaythelos, who married this particular Egyptian princess, c. 1300 BC.

As a further aside, isn't interesting how the Irish-Scots chose the term Nova Scotia – Nova being "new" from the Latin – as the name of their new provincial homeland in Canada, rather than "Nova or New Scotland".

As to the Stone being ‘on loan’, you could well be right – I knew it had been physically returned, so just looked up the date.

The Welsh/Northumbrian references – that's just my own memories (secondary) with no source. I knew the numbers (I may have got them slightly mixed) and it was only when I was learning tourist-Greek many years later that I realised what the Greek numbers reminded me of.. I did look at some more fragments of Welsh when I next went to Wales (there is or was a very good 2nd-hand bookshop in Laugharne, where Dylan Thomas's Boat-house writing shed is located) and there are lots of tantalising traces of roots. I'm only a bare-foot philologist so don't take my word for it!

The dates of the decline and fall of Minoan culture are notorious but may be controversial still..

A couple of minor points:

The Stone of Scone aka Stone of Destiny was returned to Scotland in 1996 and no longer resides beneath the monarch's throne.

The Welsh language also has surprising roots in Greek, particularly in its ancient form.

For instance, the old sheep-counting numbers, 'Yan, Tan, Tethera, Pethera,.. The Northumbrian dialect also had this system.

On a more general point, if the Hyksos travelled from Crete, would this have been part of the decline of Minoan civilisation, between 1450 and 1100 BCE, notoriously as a consequence of some catastrophic disaster, whether human (invasion) or natural?

"The Stone of Scone aka Stone of Destiny was returned to Scotland in 1996 and no longer resides beneath the monarch's throne."

I thought it was "on loan" to Scotland, just like all of the land in Scotland is "on loan" (similar to any Crown connected land including Canada); I will admit that I could be very wrong here.

Replying to Keltic Saxon here, as 'reply' button seems not to work for me:

I don't know if this applies throughout , but David Bentley Hart does make the correct translation, into 'Judaean' at Rev. 3:9 .

I like his literal translation of the NT – he attempts to work within a correct historical context, and extends the courtesy to the point of allowing 'inconvenient' changes of tense, person and I think even mode, to stand rather than smoothing them over. Also he allows the nomenclature of the time to stand unchanged, eg 'Kosmos', various words all usually translated as 'Hell', faithful replication of 'God/god' distinctions and much else.

Much to recommend it for anyone looking past the glosses of the intervening centuries.

Replying to Keltic Saxon on the "jew" this is an example of the concept of citizen of the state being superimposed over ethnic member of the nation . The greeks had differing names for the judahites and the edomites that inundated judah province while the former were held in captivity in babylon. To the ear the names sound almost the same. By roman times the romans just called everyone regardless of ethnicity judeans because they were all subjects of rome anyway. Same applies today.

this concept is the cause of all the euro worlds woes and why the west is so deluded today. exhibit A: western nations in the world cup; Germany, France, England etc. it is not a competition of nations but of political entities called states. In reality it has become a wokeist cultural marxist farce.

I've long understood the christian bible is a fraud and therefore christianity. We all know of the extreme control of all forms of media and education by the jews. Yet this book just soldiers on through all of that ? It's amazing how belief in this cannot allow even this simplistic level of critical thinking to wonder why this book REALLY survives.

It survives because they want and need it to survive. Really no different than the holocaust narrative.

The bible is nothing more than an attempt to spin the real history of jewish criminality.

Christianity itself is nothing more than simple Sun Tzu Art of War against us. Its turned our brains to mush and has been the very thing holding us back from ending jewish tyranny from the planet.

Argue your belief all you want, but there's no denying this is exactly where we are today. The outcome was the intention all along.

Blaming Christianity for the war of the anti christian atheists, leftists against white people, is ridiculous. White nations are dying after they have abandoned Christianity and embraced atheism, liberalism and feminism. You are irrational, the emergence of Christianity was a disaster in the eyes of the Jews. Christians bullied and oppressed Jews where ever they found them. You have no clue about history.

I find it interesting so many of us Whites seem to have this thought that Whites basically were a mess before the new comer on the block of Christianity sorted us out.

You just can't see it can you ? The jews who managed to internally subvert and ultimately destroy Rome are the ones who invented christianity and thrust it upon us. Rome was a very together, accomplished White nation. It was completely gutted and destroyed from the inside exactly like the US and Europe have been today.

Jews needed to make sure the demoralized and starving Whites of Rome didn't act on their disillusion and desperation and attack the jews for doing it to them. They created this belief system for the purpose of having something to turn to for "comfort" and distraction.

Clearly jews realized if they allowed and encouraged our White ancestors to build their foundation around this belief, they could control us.

Whites are going to build and organize civilizations, that's what we do genetically. Jews found the thing to let us do what we do and control it. Add in the turn the other cheek and love yo enemy stuff, something is coming to save us from our woes and we will not do what we should have done to our oppressors the entire time. It's worked beautifully against us.

We have not abandoned christianity, it was designed from the get go to eventually pull out from under us. What you fail to realize Sir is we could and would have rallied around any belief system we wanted and built.

The two most import keys of the christian Sun Tzu trick utilized against us was #1. jews had to be in control of it in order for the trick to work. #2. jews could NOT allow us to rally around what we used to understand and follow, that being the law of nature. Because if they allowed us to do that,... the law of nature would have taken over and we would have dealt with them properly once and for all.

We have been absolutely had by the jewish invention and control of christianity.

Argue it all you want, their plan worked perfectly. Look at exactly where we are now.

You see Sir, you are accusing me and others of blaming christianity for our current woes and its OUR fault for not continuing to adhere to christianity. This is not the case. I'm blaming jewish criminality.

Yet, in reality what we have abandoned is who we really are as Whites, and that really has zero to do with the brilliant psy op christianity. What we must currently have the courage to face head on is jews have retained who they really are all along and diverted us from being who we really are.

Christianity was a trick to destroy us. Do you Sir have the level of courage necessary to realize and accept this ? And then the necessary controlled anger and motivation to go after who did this to us ?

The entire scam was to destroy the natural fight in us.

As far as the parting of the sea, have you ever examined Emmanuel Velikovsky, a Jewish Russian psychiatrist who came to the US and was excoriated by the establishment after he started publishing Worlds In Collision, Ages in Chaos, etc.? Thesis that Venus was a comet that caused this chaos as it affected our solar system in two different passes, causing all that havoc recorded in the OT. Also the Electric Universe that James McCanney, astrophysicist, mathematician concurs with and the establishment hotly denies. Evidence shows that the Great Pyramid was constructed by unknown means about 10,000 BC and not the 5,000 BC officially decreed, and Egypt was clearly in decline during the early Biblical history.

Continuing confusion about Jews, Judeans, Judahites, Israelites, etc. Sodomite King James's translators caused a lot of mischief by translating everything as "Jews".

Bertrand Comparet said Rabbi S Wise said it so well he couldn't improve on it: "The return from Babylon and the introduction of the Babylonian Talmud mark the end of Hebrewism and the beginning of Judaism."

"It is a lamentable fact that there are many who with great labour carry out and publish investigations on the monuments of antiquity, the manners and institutions of nations and other illustrative subjects, and whose chief purpose in all this is too often to find mistakes in the sacred writings and so to shake and weaken their authority. Some of these writers display not only extreme hostility, but the greatest unfairness; in their eyes a profane book or ancient document is accepted without hesitation, whilst the Scripture, if they only find in it a suspicion of error, is set down with the slightest possible discussion as quite untrustworthy. It is true, no doubt, that copyists have made mistakes in the text of the Bible; this question, when it arises, should be carefully considered on its merits, and the fact not too easily admitted, but only in those passages where the proof is clear. It may also happen that the sense of a passage remains ambiguous, and in this case good hermeneutical methods will greatly assist in clearing up the obscurity. But it is absolutely wrong and forbidden, either to narrow inspiration to certain parts only of Holy Scripture, or to admit that the sacred writer has erred." ✂

Why so much animosity towards the Old Testament? While the Jews occupy most of the stories, the OT is not about modern Jewry. The theme of the Old Testament is God preparing salvation of humanity by the "rod out of the stem of Jesse." Jesus fulfills the Old Testament and the OT points to Christ. Furthermore the Jews in the New Testament (modern Jewry) deviate from God and form a new religion of Judaism. God was done with this chosen people, He says in Malachi clearly that He no longer blesses them but curses them!

You have done great studies here on the hyksos in historical literature but I caution on reading the OT from this perspective. All of the events of the Israelites God used and prevailed over to lead us to Jesus.

The Leper narrative mentioned was interesting because Moses was instructed by God to put his hand in his cloak and pull it out, upon doing this it was snow white with leprosy. Exodus 4:6

An interesting read indeed! Thanks Russ

Another overlooked historical item is the commandment, "Though shall not commit adultery", which literally means "though shall not mix with or dilute the purity of (the race)", some how it has evolved to it's common meaning of today . Coveting or wanting someone's wife or the ass of his servant is well covered in the Tenth Commandment.

Right you are, Finicum! The first 5 commandments govern behavior towards Yahweh, God; the last 5 govern behavior towards our kinsmen (neighbors). These laws (and more) were only ever given, and directly applied, to the Israelites, with whom Yahweh, God, made a covenant (a marriage contract with the nation of Israel – the 12 tribes of Israel/Jacob), which they accepted, but broke some centuries later. Read Romans 5:13 For until the law sin was in the world: but sin is not imputed when there is no law.

Yahshua (Jesus), who only ever came to redeem the House (family) of Israel, who'd been under the Law, gave this summation as His answer in the following versus of Matthew 22:36-40 "Master [Jesus], which is the great commandment in the law? 37 Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. 38 This is the first and great commandment. 39 And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. 40 On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."

Christ came to fulfill the law, as He said in Mat 5:17 "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill." He did this when He, as God manifest in the flesh, and still being Husbandman to Israel, died as such, thus freeing Israel from the marriage contract (Old Covenant/Testament), while at the same time restoring the former by offering up a "New Covenant". So, just like In contract law, when either one of the two parties dies, the contract becomes nullified, and the other party is released from the consequences of breaking that contract. And thus, we, as the people of God (the descendants of Israel) – the only people who were ever under the Law – now have access to that new contract or New Covenant through the propitiation of Christ's death and His resurrection. And thankfully, thereafter, the Law has been prophetically written in our hearts, according to Jeremiah 31:33.

There is no universal Gospel of salvation to the World. This defies logic and has no biblical basis, unless you twist and pervert scripture. Besides the earlier accounts of the White Adamic nations (Adam means ruddy, able to blush, in Hebrew), of whom are listed in Genesis 10, the Bible, narrows it focus through Abraham, Isaac and then ultimately Jacob/Israel, and is chiefly concerned with only the White Nation of Israel, by whom, to whom, for whom it is written. Furthermore, there is no “spiritual” Israel in the New Testament, just like there wasn’t in the Old Testament.

As Christ, Himself, said in Mat 15:24 “But he [Jesus] answered and said, I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel.” This is why the identification of our White Israelite heritage is so vital. He is literally our Kinsman Redeemer!

Even our own spirit attest to this, but we must be born from above (have an Adamic Spirit, as was breathed into Adam, the progenitor of the White Race of Adam/Adamkind/mankind), just as Christ said in John 3:3 “Jesus answered [Nicodemus] and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born from above (Stong G509: ἀνωθεν > anōthen > an’-o-then. From G507; from above), he cannot see the kingdom of God.” Many, if not most English texts, mistranslate the greek word for “from above” as “again”.

Christ further expands on this in John in 3:5-7 “Jesus answered [Nicodemus], Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.:6 That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. 7 Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born ‘from above’.”

The invitation of Christ into His Kingdom is exclusive to those whom He created, that are of the racial stock of Adam, and Salvation (rescue) was for the House (family/family tree) of Israel only! Read Romans 11:26-27 “And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer [Christ], and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob [Israel]: 27 For this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins.”

From My Sister....

In Egyptian, Hebrew has also been translated as Hapiru to mean “dirty, dusty or out law”. (See Wikipedia Hapiru) Also look up in The Jewish Encyclopedia- a very honest website for definitions. This site has a more credible explanation of the word as referenced in the Bible itself.

I don’t believe the history of the Jewish people is so grand as portrayed in the Bible.

The Jews came out of a conglomeration of Cannonite dwellers. They worshipped Baal – a sky god as well as Egyptian gods and nomadic gods. (See Dr Israel Finklestein) no kidding on the name. Also see article in Haaretz May 8 2003.

The Old Testament was designed as a propaganda piece during a power vacuum between the Assyrian and Egyptian conflicts 9th c bce and ratified during Ptolemy I

Philadelphus third c. bce as the Septuagint. (One of Alexander the Great's heirs)

As I understand it, In the middle of these two ancient super powers sits Canaan. (Israel)
This is the time of the height of the city/state and the end of tribalism. An attempt at peace Among many people working toward a common goal. How the pyramids could be built.

The problem with this article is it holds the Old Testament account as a reliable history source yet doesn't source Egyptian or Assyrian primary sources. The Canaanite territories are inconsequential at that time. That is why they put God into so much of it as invisible force working for them. The Force be with us!

I think the Egyptian Hyksos rulers is a story that is not yet complete. But leave it to the propaganda elite in ivory towers to spin it into a Bible debate.

This is the error of the Protestant constant attack against the True Church

For example. Look at the telling of the crossing of the Red Sea. Instead as literal read as metaphor. See it as armies on both sides and Jews escaping in the middle. The Red Sea is a sea of blood I. e a battlefield.

The Old Testament was, from its inception designed to create out of nothing a nation on Par with other great kingdoms like Egypt.

The modern Jews and Protestants as well as cults like the Mormons and JW's who will take their marching orders from them are playing an ancient war tactic against a modern population. You could compare Stalin to this. Not so much Hitler or Napoleon.

Winter Watch article bases its info on David Raul a former rock musician and self styled Egyptologist. He is a typical 12 triber (like the Mormons) and my guess is an "end times believer" Winter Watch is tainted!

Sorry, but is this:

Israel Uber Allis

referring to the text by Anis Nassar? I have never read this book and wondered if that was a reference to it being something good to look into.

Just missing what this means and could use your assistance. As usual, many thanks!

No idea who David Raul is. Are you referring to David Rohl the archeologist who researched Avaris? I think you are creating a straw man. The article only deals with one period of the story centering around the Hyksos and Avaris. It barely goes into the colonization of the Levant.

Russ, thanks for a very interesting and provocative article – I've only recently started to read your pieces, so thanks for re-posting!

The identity and genesis of the Hyksos is a long-standing bone of contention, but this radical theory I've certainly never heard before, and it does have the attraction of addressing both biblical history/myth and contemporaneous sources from outside that notoriously isolated narrative. I always get confused between the Hyksos horse-warriors and the Sea People, so thanks for correcting someone else (and me) on this.

Terrific article by Winter Watch... among many others!

Actually, it is even simpler than outlined above, but CONFUSING because of naming conventions, terms, bible fake history, and in particular historical anachronisms... i.e. putting the cart before the horse.

What is specifically CONFUSING is the terms "MESOPOTAMIA," "PHOENICIANS" – both GREEK words that confuse modern readers.

The Phoenicians, Carthaginians, Canaanites, and Hyksos were all SEMETIC peoples, THEY WERE ALL CANAANITES... AS WERE THE JEWS!

See any of the terrific History with Cy videos on the Canaanites, Phoenicians, or Carthaginians, or other excellent videos such as "The PAGAN ORIGINS OF JUDAISM."

The excellent video "THE BIBLE AND PLAGIARISM: re-Puposing stories of Old" explains how, for example, the Chapter of Isaiah was clearly written by two different authors, a hundred years apart, but for "divine" messaging purposes, CONFLATED as ONE (i.e. a historical ANACHRONISM).

“SEMITIC” simply means originally out of the Arabian desert... descendants of Semitic ancestors from the Arabian desert.

Exactly as the Hebrew, Jewish bible claims that Abraham was originally from Ur, then he MIGRATED from Ur to Canaan, thence to Egypt, then back to Canaan.

The Semites were NOMADIC DESERT dwellers who migrated up out of the Arabian desert to SUMERIA... and LIKED the settled cities, and civilization, and they adopted all the best customs, practices, cultural, and social sophistication of the settled, CITY-DWELLING Sumerians... WHILE RETAINING their SEMITIC CULTURES, LANGUAGES, and roots.

Sargon the Great was the most famous of the early SEMITES IN SUMERIA, he USURPED – wrested, stole, conquered – POWER from the King (of ____), then with his well trained, disciplined, and motivated army, conquered the neighbors...

and then, as historian Amanda Podany explained, he kept going, until his empire stretched across two-thirds of the fertile crescent from the Persian Gulf (cities of lower Sumeria where the Tigris & Euphrates emptied into the gulf; including Lagash, Ur, Uruk, i.e. the region later known as Babylon) all the way to what is today northern Syria on the Mediterranean coast.

AKKADIAN is a SEMITIC language, i.e. proto Assyrian, Canaanite, Arab, and Hebrew – and became the lingua franca of the region for the next 1,000 years, until replaced by a similar SEMITIC language, ARAMAIC, a thousand years later.

. Akkad fell away in to the dust of history (Sargon's freshly built capitol city Agade has still not been discovered), but in the same exact region ANOTHER SEMITIC PEOPLES sprang up – and the ASSYRIANS regarded themselves as SARGON's (Akkadian) DESCENDANTS & RIGHTFUL HEIRS.

THE ASSYRIANS named after their god and city of ASHUR –

The Semites coming through Sumer MIGRATED EVERYWHERE – famously they SET UP TRADING COLONIES IN the HITTITE EMPIRE, and settled along the Levantine coast (from Anatolia to the Sinai Desert), i.e. became the CANAANITES, but make no mistake, they migrated to the NORTH and EAST as well, there were undoubtedly Semitic Assyrian, Akkadian (etc.) slaves or traders who were taken in by or married to SCYTHIANS and thence to the far east as well.

But we'll concentrate on their (Semitic) eastern migration – exactly as the bible says

JOSEPH'S BROTHERS WENT TO EGYPT SEEKING GREENER PASTURES,

...so the SEMITIC NOMADS wandered FROM CANAAN IN TO EGYPT over hundreds of years. Princeton Professor Philip K. Hitti wrote an excellent book, "A Short History of the Arabs" where he explains the SEMITES GENETIC ROOTS and culture;

he explains that these were a hard, resilient, resourceful desert dwelling people who lived by their wits and cunning: set off across the desert for a distant oasis, only to miss your mark... or arrive at a bare, dried out oasis could be a death sentence.

So these people were very hard and austere, and owned only what they could carry; and when times got tough... they were EXPERT at TOSSING SOME of the weaker, less valuable... or more contentious members of the clan/tribe OUT of the clan, either sold as slaves, or left in the desert to die. For these people, arriving at the fertile river deltas – either where the Tigris & Euphrates emptied in to the sea, or the similar Nile delta –

WAS LIKE HEAVEN. With practically UNLIMITED WATER, they could be fruitful and multiply.... just like the bible says about the the descendants of Joseph's brothers!

And – as the SEMITIC AKKADIANS and later ASSYRIANS came to DOMINATE non-Semitic SUMERIAN cities and culture; so too the CANAANITE SEMITIC NOMADS IN EGYPT became KNOWN AS "HYKSOS" _ - another confusing damn GREEK word meaning "FOREIGNER OVERLORD."

Their organization, resourcefulness, social cohesion, and aggressive, warlike culture SOON CAME TO DOMINATE their Northern, "Lower" Egyptian host peoples.... exactly as the bible states that the Jews became perceived as a threat by the Egyptians.

After DOMINATING, RULING LOWER EGYPT from their freshly built capitol city AVARISE in the Nile Delta, the HYKSOS RULE was CONTESTED by the also hard, austere DESERT PEOPLE of UPPER EGYPT –

Egyptians noble families based around THEBES CONTINUED TO REBEL AGAINST "Hyksos" i.e. CANAANITE SEMITIC OVERLORDS rule, and eventually – after many bloody defeats (including the Hyksos trying to ally with the Black Nubians of Kush to "take out" the Thebans) the Egyptians succeeded, besieging, then DESTROYING AVARIS in about 1550, making the young AHMOSE the FIRST PHARAOH of his new dynasty.

The bible INVERTS this story – of EGYPTIANS EXPELLING the HATED HYKSOS OVERLORDS – as "the poor, downtrodden Jews FORCED TO FLEE SLAVERY at the hands of Egyptians."

Another bible INVERSION is that PHARAOH AHMOSE and his successors

CONTINUED THEIR MARCH to EXPELL THE HYKSOS all the way to their...
HYKSOS! –

source: the cities of Canaan along the Mediterranean coast.

Another clue is also in the bible, which states that SOLOMON HAD HUNDREDS of FOREIGN WIVES – and, presumably, CHILDREN BY THEM.

Can you say “RACIAL MIXING?”!!

Even as the priests and scribes who wrote up the bible LOATHED MIXED MARRIAGES....

yet they BRAGGED that their MYTHICAL hero SOLOMON IMPREGNATED HUNDREDS of foreign wives and concubines! (This “HAVE YOUR CAKE, and EAT IT TOO” is STILL the PREDOMINANT outlook of “the hive Tribe”!)

Throughout Canaan, MARRIAGES OF ALLIANCE to cement business and mutual protection deals WERE COMMON PRACTICE. Not to mention slaves were sold – to Egypt, to the Hittites, to Assyria, to the Scythians, to MERCHANT SHIPS headed to the far western Mediterranean, and to other points far east and west... = more race & gene mixing.

So the best way to explain all this is THE HYKSOS as PROTO-JEWS.

With the bible stating that the “Exodus” Hebrew slaves helped build the storehouse cities of RAMESSES & PITAH, that points to the Exodus as being about the era of Ramses I or II – the later dying 1213 B.C. So there were between TWO-HUNDRED and THREE HUNDRED YEARS between AHMOSE’S DEFEAT, CONQUEST, and EXPULSION of the HYKSOS in 1,350 BC, and any biblical ANACHRONISM of a VAST, GREAT “Exodus” of (the bible claims!) 600,000 warrior-aged men under Moses after a Pharaoh named Ramesses started building his storehouse cities of Ramesses and Pitah as the bible claims.

So saying “The HYKSOS WERE JEWS” is inaccurate – there was a lot of race-mixing and cultural mixing going on over HUNDREDS of years after! –

but these SEMITICE NOMADS who HAD GONE FROM CANAAN TO EGYPT and BACK

TO CANAAN – exactly as the bible states, for BOTH ABRAHAM, AND for JOSEPH’S BROTHERS – probably were indeed the PROTO- JEWS.

The bible “exodus” story is FAKE HISTORY: the RAMSES, 1,200 era history of the Egypt-Canaanite region is practically MODERN HISTORY, and EVERYONE in the region WOULD HAVE KNOWN OF, FEARED, and WRITTEN ABOUT 600,000 lean, hungry Hebrew warrior-age men on the march under Moses!

MOSES is a FICTIONAL, FAKE HISTORY character, as Acharya states,

“An ANCIENT SUN-GOD, turned in to a Hebrew man.”

Not only did the Hebrew, Israelite, Jewish, tribe of Judah bible priests and scribes create a FAKE HISTORY... but they up and STOLE three of the main attributes of their MOSES MYTH from their ancient predecessors!

They STOLE the MYTH of the “baby in a basket cast on the river” from the SARGON of AKKAD origin myth...

they STOLE the MYTH of “MOSES THE LAWGIVER” from the steles of HAMMURABI getting his law code direct from the SUN GOD SHAMASH...

and the Hebrews/Jews up and STOLE Moses’ very name!

from the EGYPTIAN PRINCE, NATIONAL LIBERATOR HERO OF HIS PEOPLE who EXPELLED the HATED Semitic “Hyksos” CANAANITE OVERLORDS, prince> Pharaoh “AHMOSE” became “MOSES” in the Hebrew, twisted Jewish fake history retelling of the story!

I linked here from Henry Makow’s website. Makow claims to be saving Jewish people and humanity with his “work”. Here he claims the Hyksos are Hebrews because they were “pushy and rude”. What Makow obviously doesn’t understand is that Jewish people are NOT the same people as the Hebrew Israelites. He is getting old and maybe senile (I’m getting that way myself)? Clearly Jews are descended from the Pharisee – NOT the Judean Hebrew Israelites! If you look up the biblical new year, you’ll see Rosh Chosedim is the Hebrew new year, while Rosh Hashanah is the Jewish new year, not that its the only proof they aren’t the same people. Makow seems to be working for the Jesuit Superior General, knowingly or unknowingly – in his case probably unknowingly?

They weren’t jews, Russ, they were Aryans. The jews didn’t hijack and adopt the Judean identity until much later. Moses was a real guy, there is a relic in the British museum that is so inscribed that ‘he of the basket lies buried here’, it was the entrance to his grave site, but British Academe are seemingly unaware of that... Alan Wilson figured it out though; it is written in the language of the ancient Brits which still exists today as Cymraeg, or Welsh, and existed in Egypt as hieroglyphs, and existed in Israel as Hebrew. The same language, different alphabets.

Manetho

translated by I. P. Cory and E. Richmond Hodge 1828/1832 and 1876

NOTE

The Egyptian priest Manetho wrote in the middle of the third century BCE, and he produced a monumental history of Egypt in three volumes, of which only a bare-bones outline and a few excerpts survive. This text has been essential for Egyptologists in reconstructing the dynasties of Egypt, and other elements of the fragments have contributed to debates over the builders of the pyramids, the Exodus from Egypt, and other controversies of Biblical interest.

Picture

OF THE WRITING OF MANETHO.

It remains, therefore, to make certain extracts concerning the dynasties of the Egyptians, from the writings of Manetho, the Sebennyte, the high-priest of the idolatrous temples of Egypt, in the time of Ptolemaeus Philadelphus. These, according to his own account, he copied from the inscriptions which were engraved, in the sacred dialect and hieroglyphic characters, upon the columns set up in the Seriadic land by Thoth, the first Hermes, (Mercury); and after the Flood, were translated from the sacred dialect into the Greek tongue, in hieroglyphic characters, and committed to writing in books, and deposited by Agathodaemon, the son of the second Hermes, the father of Tat, (Taut of the Phoenician mythology), in the penetralia of the temples of Egypt. He has addressed and explained them to Philadelphus, the second king (of Egypt) who bore the name of Ptolemaeus, in the book which he has entitled Sothis, (or the Dog-star).

This epistle is as follows:--

The Epistle Of Manetho, [1] the Sebennyte, to Ptolemy Philadelphus.

"To the great and august King, Ptolemy Philadelphus: Manetho, the High-priest and Scribe of the sacred adyta in Egypt, being by birth a Sebennyte and a citizen of Heliopolis, to his sovereign Ptolemy, humbly greeting:

"It is right for us, most mighty King, to pay due attention to all things which it is your pleasure we should take into consideration. In answer, then, to your inquiries concerning the things which shall come to pass in the world, I shall, according to your commands, lay before you what I have gathered from the sacred books written by Hermes Trismegistus, our forefather. Farewell, my Prince and Sovereign." --Syncel. Chron. 40. --Euseb. Chron. 6.

THE EGYPTIAN DYNASTIES

The Dynasty of the Demigods.

The 1st of the Egyptian kings was Hephaestus, who reigned 724 and a half years and four days.

The 2nd was Helios (i.e. the Sun), the son of Hephaestus (who reigned) 86 years.

3rd, Agathodaemon, who reigned 56 and a half years and ten days.

4th, Kronus 40 and a half years.

5th, Osiris and Isis, 35 years.

6th, . . . years.

7th, Typhon, 29 years.

8th, Horus, the demigod, 25 years.
6th, Ares, the demigod, 23 years.
10th, Anubis, the demigod, 17 years.
11th, Heracles the demigod, 15 years.
12th, Apollo, the demigod, 25 years.
13th, Ammon, the demigod, 30 years.
14th, Tithoes, the demigod, 27 years.
15th, Sosus, the demigod, 32 years.
16th, Zeus, the demigod, 20 years. — Syncel. Chron. 19. --Euseb. Chron. 7.

The Egyptian Dynasties After the Deluge

The First Dynasty.

After the dead demigods, the first dynasty consisted of eight kings.

1. The first was Menes the Thinite; he reigned 62 years, and perished by a wound received from a hippopotamus.
2. Athothis, his son, reigned 57 years; he built the palaces at Memphis, and left the anatomical books, for he was a physician.
3. Kenkenes, his son, reigned 31 years.
4. Venephes, his son, reigned 23 years. In his time a great plague raged through Egypt. He erected the pyramids near Cochome.
5. Usaphaedus, his son, reigned 20 years.
6. Miebidus, his son, reigned 26 years.
7. Semempsis, his son, reigned 18 years. In his reign a terrible pestilence afflicted Egypt.
8. Bieneches, his son, reigned 26 years.

The whole number of years amounted to 253 [or 263, according to the true reckoning].

The Second Dynasty

Consisted of nine Thinite kings.

1. Boethus the First reigned 38 years. During his reign a chasm of the earth opened near Bubastus, and many persons perished.
2. Kaeachos reigned 39 years. Under him the bulls, Apis in Memphis, and Meneus, (Mnevis), in Heliopolis, and the Mendesian goat, were appointed to be gods.
3. Binothis reigned 47 years. In his time it was decided that women might hold the imperial government.
4. Tlas reigned 17 years.
5. Sethenes reigned 41 years.
6. Chaeres {reigned} 17 years.
7. Nephhercheres (reigned) 25 years. In his time it is said that the Nile flowed with honey during eleven days.
8. Sesochris, whose height was five cubits and his breadth three, (reigned) 48 years.
9. Cheneres 30 years.

The whole number of years is 302.

The Third Dynasty, of Nine Memphite Kings.

1. Necherophes reigned 28 years. In his time the Libyans revolted from the Egyptians; but, on account of an unexpected increase of the moon, they surrendered themselves for fear.
2. Tosorthrus reigned 29 years. He is called Asclepius [i.e., Aesculapius], by the Egyptians, for his medical knowledge. He built a house of hewn stones, and greatly patronised writing.
3. Tyrus reigned 7 years.
4. Mesochris 17 years.
5. Soiphis [or, Souphis] 16 years.
6. Tosertasis 19 years.
7. Achis [or, Aches] 42 years.
8. Siphuris 30 years.
9. Kerperes 26 years. Altogether 214 years.

The Fourth Dynasty,
Of eight Memphite kings of a different race.

1. Soris reigned 29 years.
 2. Suphis reigned 63 years. He built the largest pyramid, which Herodotus says was constructed by Cheops. He was arrogant toward the gods, and wrote the sacred book; which is regarded by the Egyptians as a work of great importance.
 3. Suphis reigned 66 years.
 4. Mencheres (Men-ke-ra) 63 years.
 5. Ratoeses 25 years.
 6. Bicheres 22 years.
 7. Sebercheres 7 years.
 8. Thamphthis 9 years.
- Altogether 274 years [or 284, according to the correct computation.]

The Fifth Dynasty,
Consisting of nine Elephantine kings.

1. Usercheris reigned 28 years.
2. Sephres 13 years.
3. Nephcheres 20 years.
4. Sisiris 7 years.
5. Cheres 20 years.
6. Rathuris 44 years.
7. Mencheres 9 years.
8. Tarcheres [or, Tatcherer] 44 years.
9. Obnos [or, Onnos] 33 years. Altogether 248 years [or, 218 years.]

The Sixth Dynasty,
Consisting of six Memphite kings.

1. Othoes, 30 years, who was killed by his guards.
2. Phius reigned 53 years.
3. Methusuphis 7 years.
4. Phiops, who began to reign at six years of age, and reigned till he had completed his hundredth year.

5. Menthesuphis reigned one year.

6. Nitocris, who was the most handsome woman of her time, of a fair complexion; she built the third pyramid, and reigned 12 years.

Altogether 203 years.

The Seventh Dynasty,

Of seventy Memphite kings, who reigned 70 days.

The Eighth Dynasty,

Of twenty-seven Memphite kings, who reigned 146 years.

The Ninth Dynasty,

Of nineteen Heracleotic kings, who reigned 409 years.

1. The first was Achthoes, the worst of all his predecessors. He did much harm to all the inhabitants of Egypt, was seized with madness, and killed by a crocodile.

The Tenth Dynasty,

Consisting of nineteen Heracleotic kings, who reigned 185 years.

The Eleventh Dynasty,

Consisting of sixteen Diospolite, (or Theban), kings, who reigned 43 years.

Among them Ammenemes, who reigned 16 years.

The sum total of the above-named kings is 192, who reigned 2,308 years and 70 days.

--From Syncellus Chronicon, 54 to 59 --Euseb. Chron., 14 and 15.

THE SECOND BOOK OF MANETHO

The Twelfth Dynasty,

Of seven Diospolite, (or Theban), kings.

1. Geson Goses [or, Sesonchosis; or, Sesortosis; or, Sesortosis], the son of Ammanemes. He reigned 46 years.

2. Ammanemes reigned 38 years. He was slain by his eunuchs.

3. Sesostris 41 [or, 48] years. He conquered all Asia in nine years, and Europe as far as Thrace; everywhere erecting monuments of his conquests of those nations; statues of men among nations who acted bravely, but among the degenerate he erected figures of women, engraving their sexual organs upon the pillars. By the Egyptians he is supposed to be the first after Osiris.

4. Lachares 8 years, who built the Labyrinth in Arsenoite [sic] as a tomb for himself.

5. Ammeres reigned 8 years.

6. Ammenemes 8 years.

7. Skemiophris, his sister, 4 years. Altogether 160 years.

The Thirteenth Dynasty

Consisted of 60 Diospolite, (or Theban), kings, whose names are lost. They reigned 453 years (according to the Armenian copy of Eusebius).

The Fourteenth Dynasty.

Consisting of 76 Xoite kings, who ruled 184 [or, 484] years. (The number 484 is from the Armenian version of Eusebius.)

The names are entirely lost.

The Fifteenth [2] Dynasty

Of the Hyk-shos or Shepherd-Kings. There were six foreign, i.e., Phoenician or Canaanitish kings. This dynasty took Memphis, and built a city in the Sethroite nome, whence they made an invasion, and conquered all Egypt. Of these--

1. Saiites [or, Salatis] reigned 19 years, after whom the Saite nome or district is called.
2. Beon [or, Bnon] reigned 44 years.
3. Pachnan [or, Apachnas] 61 years.
4. Staan 50 years.
5. Archies [or, Assis] 49 years.
6. Aphobis [or, Apophis] 61 years. Altogether 284 years.

The Sixteenth Dynasty

Of 32 Grecian shepherds, who reigned 518 years.

The Seventeenth Dynasty

Consisted of 43 shepherd-kings and 43 Thebans, [or, Diospolites.]

The Shepherds and Thebans reigned altogether 151 years.

The Eighteenth Dynasty,

Of sixteen Diospolite, (or, Theban), kings.

1. Amos; in whose time Moses went forth from Egypt, as we have shown.
2. Chebros 13 years.
3. Amenophthis 24 years.
4. Amersis [or, Amensis] 22 years.
5. Misaphris 13 years.
6. Mispthagmuthosis 26 years, in whose time the Flood of Deucalion happened.
7. Tuthmosis reigned 9 years.
8. Amenophis 31 years. He is supposed to be the Memnon, to whom the musical statue [3] (in Egypt) was erected.
9. Horus reigned 37 years.
10. Acherrhes [or, Akenchres] 32 years.
11. Rathos [or, Rathotis] 6 years.
12. Chebres 12 years.
13. Acherrhes [or, Akenchres] 12 years.
14. Armesses [or, Armais] 5 years.
15. Ramesses 1 year.
16. Amenoph [or, Amenophath] 19 years. Altogether 263 [or, 259].

The Nineteenth Dynasty,

Consisted of seven Diospolite, (or Theban), kings. 1. Sethos reigned 51 years.

2. Rapsakes [or, Rampses] 61 years.

3. Ammenephthes 20 years.
 4. Rameses 60 years.
 5. Ammenemnes [or, Ammenemes] 5 years.
 6. Thuoris, who is called by Homer, Polybus.
 7. Alcandrus, 7 years, in whose time Ilion, (i.e., Troy), was taken.
- Altogether 209 years.

In this second book of Manetho are contained 96 kings, and 2121 years. --Syncel. Chron. 59 to 75. —Euseb. Chron. 15 to 17.

THE THIRD BOOK OF MANETHO

The Twentieth Dynasty,

Of 12 Diospolite, (or Theban), kings, who reigned 135 years.

The Twenty-first Dynasty,

Of seven Tanite kings.

1. Smedes [or, Smendes] reigned 26 years.
 2. Psusenes, or Psuneses, 46 years.
 3. Nephhercheres 4 years.
 4. Amenophthis 9 years.
 5. Osochor 6 years.
 6. Psinaches 9 years.
 7. Susenes [or, Psusennes] 30 years.
- Altogether 130 years.

The Twenty-second Dynasty,

Of nine Bubastite kings.

1. Sesonchis (or Shishak) [4] 21 years.
 2. Osoroth [or, Osorthon] 15 years.
 - 3, 4, 5. Three others reigned 25 years.
 6. Takellothis [5] 13 years.
 - 7, 8, 9. Three others 42 years.
- Altogether reigned 120 years.

The Twenty-Third Dynasty,

Of four Tanite kings.

1. Petoubates reigned 40 years, in whose time the Olympiads began.
 2. Osorcho 8 years, whom the Egyptians call Hercules.
 3. Psammus 10 years.
 4. Zeet 31 years.
- Altogether 89 years.

The Twenty-Fourth Dynasty.

Bocchoris, [or Bonchoris], the Saite, reigned 6 years, in whose reign (a miracle occurred), for a sheep spoke.

Total 990 years.

The Twenty-Fifth Dynasty,
Consisted of 3 Ethiopic kings.

1. Sabbakon, who having taken Bocchoris captive, burnt him alive, and reigned 8 years.
 2. Sevechus, [6] his son, who reigned 14 years.
 3. Tarkos, or Tarakos [Tirhakah], [7] 18 years.
- Altogether 40 years.

The Twenty-Sixth Dynasty,
Consisting of 9 Saite kings.

1. Stephinates reigned 7 years.
2. Nechepsos reigned 6 years.
3. Nechao (or Necho) 8 years.
4. Psammitichus 54 years.
5. Nechao, (or Necho), the 2nd reigned 6 years. He took Jerusalem, and carried away captive Joahaz, the king, to Egypt.
6. Psammuthis 6 years.
7. Vaphris (or Hophra) 19 years, to whom the remainder of the Jews fled when Jerusalem was taken by the Assyrians.
8. Amosis 44 years.
9. Psammacherites [8] 6 months. Altogether 150 years and six months.

The Twenty-seventh Dynasty,
Of eight Persian kings.

1. Cambyses reigned over Persia, his own kingdom, 5 years, and over Egypt 6 years.
2. Darius, the son of Hystaspes, 36 years.
3. Xerxes the Great 21 years.
4. Artabanus 7 months. [9]
5. Artaxerxes 41 years.
6. Xerxes 2 months.
7. Sogdianus 7 months.
8. Darius, the son of Xerxes, 19 years. Altogether 124 years and four months.

The Twenty-Eighth Dynasty.
Amyrteos, the Saite, reigned 6 years.

The Twenty-Ninth Dynasty,
Consisting of four Mendesian kings.

1. Nepherites reigned 6 years.
 2. Achoris 13 years.
 3. Psammuthis 1 year.
 4. Nephorites 4 months.
 5. Muthis 1 year.
- Altogether 20 years and four months.

The Thirtieth Dynasty,
Consisting of three Sebennyte kings. 1. Nectanebes reigned 18 years.

2. Teds 2 years.
3. Nectanebos 18 years. Altogether 38 years.

The Thirty-First Dynasty,
Consisting of three Persian kings.

1. (Darius) Ochus, who ruled Persia 20 years and Egypt two years.
2. Arses, or Arses Ochus, (or Artaxerxes), reigned 3 years.
3. Darius 4 years. Altogether 9 years. Total 1,050 years.

From Syncell. Chron. 73 to 78 and Euseb. Chron. 16, 17.

OF THE SHEPHERD KINGS

"We had formerly a king whose name was Timaus. In his time it came to pass, I know not how, that God was displeased with us: and there came up from the East, in a strange manner, men of an ignoble race, who had the confidence to invade our country, and easily subdued it by their power, without a battle. 'And, when they had our rulers in their hands, they burnt our cities, and demolished the temples of the gods, and inflicted every kind of barbarity upon the inhabitants, slaying some, and reducing the wives and children of others to a state of slavery. At length they made one of themselves king, whose name was Salatis: he lived at Memphis, and rendered both the upper and lower regions of Egypt tributary, and stationed garrisons in places which were best adapted for that purpose. But he directed his attention principally to the security of the eastern frontier; for he regarded with suspicion the increasing power of the Assyrians, who, he foresaw, would one day undertake an invasion of the kingdom. And, observing in the Saite nome, upon the east of the Bubastite channel, a city which from some ancient theological reference was called Avaris; and finding it admirably adapted to his purpose, he rebuilt it, and strongly fortified it with walls, and garrisoned it with a force of two hundred and fifty thousand armed men. To this city Salatis repaired in summer time, to collect his tribute, and pay his troops, and to exercise his soldiers, in order to strike terror into foreigners.

And Salatis died after a reign of nineteen years; after him reigned Beon forty-four years; and he was succeeded by Apachnas, who reigned thirty-six years and seven months; after him reigned Apophis sixty-one years, and Ianias fifty years and one month. After all these reigned Assis forty-nine years and two months. These six were the first rulers amongst them, and, during all the period of their dynasty, they made war upon the Egyptians, in hope of exterminating the whole race. All this nation was styled Hyk-shos, that is, the Shepherd-Kings; for the first syllable, Hyk, according to the sacred dialect, denotes king, and sos signifies a shepherd; but this according to the vulgar tongue; and, of these two words is compounded the term Hyk-shos, whom some say were Arabians. This people, thus denominated Shepherd-Kings, and their descendants retained possession of Egypt for the space of 511 years.

After these things, he (Manetho), relates that the kings of Thebais, and of the other parts of Egypt, made an insurrection against the Shepherds; and, that a long and mighty war was carried on between them, till the Shepherds were subdued by a king whose name was Alisphragmuthosis; and, that they were by him driven out of the rest of Egypt, and shut up within a space containing ten thousand acres, which was called Avaris. All this tract of country, (says Manetho), the Shepherds surrounded with a vast and strong wall, that they might retain all their possessions and their booty within a fortress.

And Thummosis, the son of Alisphragmuthosis, endeavoured to force them by a siege, and beleaguered the place with a body of four hundred and eighty thousand men; but, at the moment when he despaired of reducing them by siege, they agreed to a capitulation, that they would leave Egypt, and should be permitted to go out, without molestation, wheresoever they pleased. And, according to this stipulation, they departed from Egypt with all their families and effects, in number not less than two hundred and forty thousand, and bent their way through the desert towards Syria. But, as they stood in fear of the Assyrians, who had then dominion over Asia, they built a city, in that country which is now called Judaea, of sufficient size to contain this multitude of men, and named it Jerusalem.

(In another book of the Egyptian histories, Manetho says), That this people, who are here called Shepherds, in their sacred books were also styled Captives.

After the departure of this nation of Shepherds to Jerusalem, Tethmosis, the king of Egypt, who drove them out, reigned twenty-five years and four months, and then died; after him his son, Chebron, took the government into his hands for thirteen years; after him reigned Amenophis for twenty years and seven months; then his sister Amesses, 21 years and nine months.

She was succeeded by Mephres, who reigned 12 years and nine months; after him Mephramuthosis, who reigned 25 years and 10 months ; then Thmosis, who reigned nine years and eight months; after whom Amenophis reigned 30 years and 10 months; then Orus (Horus), who reigned 36 and five months; then his daughter Akenchres, who reigned 12 years and one month; and after her, Rathotis for nine years; then Akencheres 12 years and five months, and another Akencheres 12 years and three months; after him, Armais reigned four years and one month; and Ramesses (the Great) one year and four months; then Armesses, (i.e., Ramses), the son of Miammoun, who reigned 66 years and two months; after him Amenophis for 19 years and six months; he was succeeded by Sethosis, who is called Ramesses, who maintained an army of cavalry and a naval force.

This king, (Sethosis), appointed his brother Armais as his viceroy over Egypt. He also invested him with all the other authority of a king, but with the following restrictions, viz.—1st, That he should not wear the crown; 2nd, Nor interfere with the queen, the mother of his children; 3rd, Nor abuse the royal concubines. Sethosis then made an expedition against the island of Cyprus, and Phoenicia, and waged war with the Assyrians and Medes; and he subdued them all, some by force of arms, and others without a blow, by the mere terror of his power. And being puffed up with his success, he advanced still more confidently, and overthrew the cities, and subdued the countries of the East.

But Armais, who was left in Egypt, took advantage of the opportunity, and fearlessly committed all those acts which his brother had enjoined him not to do; he violated the queen, and continued an unrestrained intercourse with the concubines, and, at the persuasion of his friends, he assumed the diadem, and openly opposed his brother.

But the ruler over the priests of Egypt sent to Sethosis, and informed him of what had happened, and how his brother had set himself up in opposition to his power. Upon this Sethosis immediately returned to Pelusium, and recovered his kingdom. The country of Egypt took its name from Sethosis, who was called also Ægyptus, as was his brother Armais known by the name of Danaus.” [10]

--Joseph, contr. Ap. lib. I. c. 14, 15.

OF THE ISRAELITES

“This king, (Amenophis), was desirous of beholding the gods, since Horus, one of his predecessors in the kingdom had seen them. He communicated his desire to a priest of the same name with himself, Amenophis, the son of Papis; one who seemed to partake of the divine nature, both in his wisdom and in his knowledge of futurity.

Amenophis returned him for answer, that he might behold the gods if he would cleanse the land of all lepers, and other unclean persons that were in it. Well pleased with this information, the king gathered together out of the land of Egypt all that laboured under any defect of body, to the number of 80,000, and sent them to the quarries, (in the Mafra, or, Sinaitic peninsula), which are situated on the east side of the Nile, that they might work in them, and be separated from the rest of the Egyptians.

And he, (Manetho), says, there were among them some learned priests who were (also) infected with the leprosy. And Amenophis, the wise man and prophet, fearing lest the vengeance of the gods should fall, both on himself and on the king, should it appear that violence had been used towards them, added this also in a prophetic spirit;—that certain people would come to the assistance of these polluted wretches, and would subdue Egypt, and hold it in possession for thirteen years. These tidings however he dared not to communicate to the king, but left in writing an account of what should come to pass, and destroyed himself; at which the king was fearfully distressed.

‘(After which, he writes thus, word for word): When those that were sent to work in the quarries had continued for some time in that miserable state, the king was petitioned to set apart for their habitation and protection the city Avaris, which had been left desolate by the Shepherds; and he granted them their desire: now this city, according to the ancient theology, is a Typhonian [11] city.

When these men had taken possession of the city, and found it well adapted for a revolt, they appointed over themselves a ruler out of the priests of Heliopolis, [12] one whose name was Osarsiph, [13] and they bound themselves by oath that they would be obedient. Osarsiph then, in the first place enacted this law, that they should neither worship the [Egyptian] gods, nor abstain from {eating} any of those sacred animals which the Egyptians hold in the highest veneration, but sacrifice and slay them all; and that they should connect themselves with none but such as were of that confederacy. When he had made such laws as these, and many others of a tendency directly in opposition to the customs of the Egyptians, he gave orders that they should employ the multitude of hands in rebuilding the walls about the city (Avaris), and hold themselves in readiness for war with Amenophis the king; whilst he (Osarsiph) took into his confidence and counsels some others of the priests and unclean persons. He then sent ambassadors to the city called Jerusalem; to those Shepherds who had been expelled by Tethmosis, [14] whereby he informed them of the affairs of himself, and of the others who had been treated in the same ignominious manner, and requested they would come with one consent, to his assistance in this war against Egypt. He also promised in the first place to reinstate them in their ancient city and country, Avaris, and provide a plentiful maintenance for their numerous host, and fight for them as occasion might require. He informed them, moreover, that they could easily reduce the land (of Egypt) under their dominion. The Shepherds received this message with the greatest joy, and quickly mustered to the number of 200,000 men, and came up to Avaris. Now Amenophis, king of Egypt, when he was informed of their invasion, was in great consternation, remembering the prophecy of Amenophis, the son of Papis, and he assembled the armies of the Egyptians, and took counsel with the leaders, and commanded the sacred animals to be brought to him, especially those which were held in the greatest veneration in the temples, and particularly charged the priests to conceal the images of their gods with the utmost care. And his son Sethos, who was also called Ramesses from his father Rampses, being but five years old he committed to the protection of a friend. And he marched with the rest of the Egyptians, being three hundred thousand warriors, against the enemy, who advanced to meet him; but he did not attack them, thinking it would be to wage war against the gods, but he returned, and came again to Memphis, where he took Apis, (the sacred bull), and the other sacred animals he had sent for, and retreated immediately into Ethiopia, together with all his army, and all the multitude of the Egyptians: for the king of Ethiopia was under obligations to him, wherefore he received him kindly, and took care of all the multitude that was with him, while the country supplied all that was necessary for their food. He also allotted to him cities and villages during his exile, which was to continue from its beginning during the predestined thirteen years. Moreover, he pitched a camp for an Ethiopian army upon the borders of Egypt, as a protection to king Amenophis.

While such was the state of things in Ethiopia, the people of Jerusalem, having come down in company with the unclean of the Egyptians, treated the inhabitants with such barbarity that those who witnessed their impieties believed that their joint sway was more execrable than that which the Shepherds (alone) had formerly exercised. They not only set fire to the cities and villages, but committed every kind of sacrilege, and destroyed the images of the gods, and roasted and fed upon those sacred animals that were worshipped; and having compelled the priests and prophets to kill and sacrifice them, they cast them naked out of the country.

It is also said that the priest who ordained their polity and laws was by birth a native of Heliopolis, and that he was named Osarsiph, from Osiris, the god venerated at Heliopolis. He adds, however, that when he went over to these people his name was changed, and he was called Moyses (Mouses or Moses). Manetho again says, 'after this Amenophis returned from Ethiopia with a great force, and Rampses his son also, with other forces, and encountering the Shepherds and the unclean people, they defeated them, and slew multitudes of them, and pursued the remainder to the borders of Syria (Judea).'"

--From Josephus against Apion. Book i., cap. 27.

NOTES

[1] This Epistle is now generally regarded as that of the pseudo-Manetho; not the Manetho who wrote the lists of kings, but one who assumed and abused his name.

[2] This is the Seventeenth Dynasty according to Eusebius.

[3] The researches of Pococke and Hamilton have long since proved this to be the Memnon of the Ancients, while the hieroglyphic labours of Champollion have established the claims of Amenoph to the statues he erected.

[4] See 1 Kings xi. 40.

[5] Perhaps Tiglath Pileser, king of Assyria, or some one ruling as a tributary to the Assyrian monarch.

[6] Called So, or Seve, in 2 Kings xvii. 4.

[7] 2 Kings xix. 9.

[8] Eusebius omits the last king, and inserts Ammeres at the beginning as the first.

[9] Eusebius omits Artabanus, and between Cambyses and Darius places the Magi, with a reign of seven months.

[10] Danaus was the first king of the Argives.

[11] Typhon was the Ahriman, or Satan, of the Egyptian theology. "Down to the time of Rameses, B.C. 1300, he was one of the most venerated and powerful gods. After about 970 B.C. he was regarded as the foe of Osiris and all the gods of Egypt."—Bunsen's Egypt's Place, vol. i., p. 456.

[12] Called On in Genesis xli. 45, 50; An in Egyptian.

[13] By Osarsiph he means Moses, the Jewish lawgiver and deliverer.

[14] Tethmosis was a sovereign of the 18th dynasty, according to Eusebius.

THE EPITOME OF MANETHO FROM THE EXCERPTS IN BAD LATIN
translated from the Greek (c. 500) for the Merovingian Kings (c. 750)

Of all kingdoms, we find that of the Egyptians to be the most ancient; of whose beginning we purpose to write, according to the relation of Manetho.

The first dynasty was that of the Gods, who are classed by themselves; and I reckon their reigns thus:

Some say the God Ifestus reigned in Egypt 680 years. After him, the Sun, the son of Ifestus, 77 years. After him, Osinosiris, 420 years. After him, Oros Stoliarchus, 28 years. After him, Typhon, 45 years. The sum of the reigns of the Gods amounts to 1550 years.

Then succeeds the kingdom of the Demi-gods, thus: First reigned Anubes Amusira, who composed the writings of the Egyptians, 83 years. After him, Apion Grammaticus, who reigned 77 years. In his reign commenced the kingdom of Argos, under Inachus. Afterwards, the kings of the Encynii, by whom must be understood the Demi-gods. They reigned 2100 years. This is the end of the first volume of Manetho, which contains a period of 2100 years.

Mireus and seven of his descendants reigned 253 years. Then reigned eight others 302 years. Necherocheus and eight others reigned 214 years. Likewise seventeen others, 214 years. Likewise twenty-one others, 258 years. Othoi and seven others, 203 years. Likewise fourteen others, 140 years. Likewise twenty others, 409 years. Likewise seven others, 204 years. Dynasty of Diospolites, 9 years. Dynasty of Bubastites, 153 years. Dynasty of Tanites, 184 years. Dynasty of Sebennites, 224 years. Dynasty of Memphites, 318 years. Dynasty of Iliopolites, 221 years. Dynasty of Ermupolites, 260 years.

The second volume enumerates to the 17th dynasty, and contains a period of 1520 years.

These are the Dynasties of Egypt.

The Discoveries at Avaris

For more than two centuries archaeologists have sought evidence for the Israelites in Egypt. No Israelite settlement has ever been found in the 19th Dynasty where the Orthodox Chronology predicted it would be. I told you in the last Nugget about the Austrian team of archaeologists, led by Manfred Bietak, who have been excavating at Tel ed-Daba since 1960, more commonly called Avaris in ancient times. Bietak and his team have made many astounding discoveries.

Manfred Bietak and his team have found evidence of a long period of Asiatic settlement in Avaris. Between Stratum G/1 and F there is a definite break between two distinct phases of settlement. Both Rohl and Bietak believe this line of demarcation between Stratum G/1 and F at Tel ed-Daba likely marks the break that resulted from the biblical Exodus of the Israelites from Tell ed-Daba. Around Goshen in the Second Intermediate Period there is incontrovertible evidence for a large Asiatic population. In just the time frame and place where the New Chronology predicts the Israelite sojourn in Egypt would be.

The majority of the tombs in the earlier strata are of Asiatic people from Palestine and Syria. Bietak says the early Asiatics were heavily Egyptianized. These people have spent considerable time in Egypt and have taken on many of the cultural practices of the Egyptians themselves. Under the New Chronology these people have to be Israelites. The fit for the time period perfectly matches the other indications that this indeed is the correct time period for the Exodus. These earlier Asiatics are more likely to be Joseph's relatives. The later Asiatics were very different and were not Egyptianized at all and appear to be of Hyksos descent.

In the Brooklyn Papyrus there is a list of 95 names of slaves, over 50% of which are Semitic names. There are several Biblical names in the list, e.g. Menahem, Issachar, Asher and Shiphrah. The term Apiru (the equivalent of Hebrew) appears first in the Brooklyn Papyrus. William Albright recognized the language belongs to the northwest Semitic language family which includes Biblical Hebrew. There is a high proportion of female slaves. More adult women are buried here than men. 65% of all burials are children under the age of 18 months with girls outnumbering boys by a ratio of 3:1. This could be explained by the massacre of Israelite boys whose bodies were then disposed of in mass unmarked burial pits.

All over the city of Avaris are shallow burial pits with multiple victims. There were no careful interments as was required under Egyptian customs. The bodies were thrown one on top of another in mass graves. There is no evidence of grave goods being placed with the corpses as was the Egyptian custom. Bietak is convinced this is direct evidence of a plague or catastrophe. The large part of the remaining population abandoned their homes and left en masse. Bietak says the site was then reoccupied after an unknown interval of time by Asiatics who were not Egyptianised. Hence the break between stratum G/1 and F. There is a strange anomaly where the Asiatic folk who inhabited Stratum F lived in poor conditions yet their graves were richly endowed with precious metals and jewellery .

The sources are unconnected and yet intriguingly consistent. Putting all the pieces together one can build up a consistent story which supports the Biblical account. The break in archeological stratum between G/1 and F marks the intervening years following the exodus of the Hebrew slaves from Egypt. The repopulation of Avaris sometime afterward by the Hyksos people who moved into Egypt matches the beginning of the Second Intermediate Period of the Egyptian Pharaohs. They were Asiatic people from the same region as the Israelites but not Egyptianized as Joseph and his family had been.

The facts fit the period before the Exodus well. Given the disruption at the time of plagues and the magnitude of the deaths which occurred there would have been no time to bury the dead according to Egyptian customs. The predominance of females, especially among children would have been a result of the deliberate murder of the male children by the Pharaoh. Where did such poor people (slaves no less) get such riches? Simple: read Ex 11:2 which says, "Tell all the Israelite men and women to ask their Egyptian neighbours for articles of silver and gold."

There are even more amazing discoveries to come. Read on in the next Nugget.

Rulers of Ancient Egypt's Enigmatic Hyksos Dynasty Were Immigrants, Not Invaders
Jul 16, 2020 by News Staff

« Previous | Next »

New research led by Bournemouth University archaeologists supports the theory that the Hyksos, the rulers of the 15th Dynasty of ancient Egypt, were not from a unified place of origin, but Western Asiatics whose ancestors moved into Egypt during the Middle Kingdom, lived there for centuries, and then rose to rule the north of Egypt.

A man described as 'Abisha the Hyksos,' leading a group of Aamu, a painting from the tomb of Khnumhotep II (circa 1900 BCE). Image credit: Macquarie University.

The Hyksos were a foreign dynasty that ruled parts of Egypt between 1638 and 1530 BCE, the first instance of Egypt being ruled by individuals of a foreign origin.

The narrative of how the Hyksos rose to rule is apocryphal. The Ptolemaic priest Manetho was for centuries the only account of their rise, rule, and fall.

Living approximately twelve centuries after the Hyksos dynasty, Manetho described the Hyksos rulers as leading an invading force sweeping in from the northeast and conquering the northeastern Nile Delta during the Second Intermediate Period in a time when Egypt as a country was vulnerable.

Manetho's account only survived in the works of later historians such as Flavius Josephus and, however biased and unreliable, was the solitary known source of the Hyksos for centuries.

Archaeological evidence does link Hyksos culture with an origin in the Near East, but exactly how they rose to power is unclear.

In a new study, Dr. Chris Stantis and her colleagues from Bournemouth University, the Université de Bordeaux, Durham University, and the Austrian Academy of Sciences Vienna collected enamel samples from the teeth of 75 ancient people from the Hyksos capital city of Tell el-Dab'a.

Comparing ratios of strontium isotopes in the teeth to environmental isotope signatures from Egypt and elsewhere, the researchers assessed the geographic origins of the individuals who lived in the city.

They found that a large percentage of the populace were non-locals who immigrated from a wide variety of other places. This pattern was true both before and during the Hyksos dynasty.

This pattern does not match the story of a sudden invasion from a single far-off land, but of a multi-cultural region where one internal group — the Hyksos — eventually rose to power after living there for generations.

“Archaeological chemistry, specifically isotopic analysis, shows us first-generation migration during a time of major cultural transformations in ancient Egypt,” Dr. Stantis said.

“Rather than the old scholastic theories of invasion, we see more people, especially women, migrating to Egypt before Hyksos rule, suggesting economic and cultural changes leading to foreign rule rather than violence.”

The study was published online in the journal PLoS ONE.

Donkey God

Jewish Onolatry

In ancient times, the Jews were accused of having a statue of a donkey in their temple. In some versions of the story, Moses was depicted riding the ass, in other versions it was just an ass by itself, or only the head of an ass. From whence did this accusation of onolatry (donkey worship) arise? Was it simply libel meant to discredit the Jews, or is there some truth to the claim?

The best source we have of this claim is found in the writings of the Jewish-Roman historian Josephus. In his work, Against Apion, he replies to the ancient Greek-Egyptian scholar Apion who lived circa 20 BC to 50 AD. Unfortunately, none of Apion's writings have survived, so we must rely on the response from Josephus, written around 100 AD.

Apion hath the impudence to pretend that "the Jews placed an ass's head in their holy place;" and he affirms that this was discovered when Antiochus Epiphanes spoiled our temple, and found that ass's head there made of gold, and worth a great deal of money. To this my first answer shall be this, that had there been any such thing among us, an Egyptian ought by no means to have thrown it in our teeth, since an ass is not a more contemptible animal than furones [it's unknown which animal is referred to here] and goats, and other such creatures, which among them are gods [...] Apion ought to have had a regard to these facts, unless he had himself had either an ass's heart or a dog's impudence; of such a dog I mean as they worship; for he had no other external reason for the lies he tells of us. (Josephus, Against Apion II:7)

Josephus uses the common apologetic tactic of "I'm rubber, you're glue. Whatever you say bounces off of me and sticks to you." In answer to Apion's claim that that Jews worship a donkey, he accuses him of worshipping a dog. Josephus then goes on to call Apion an ass for saying the Jews worship an ass:

The latter [Mnaseas of Patara] according to Apion, related how, "while the Jews were once in a long war with the Idumeans, there came a man out of one of the cities of the Idumeans, who there had worshipped Apollo. This man, whose name is said to have been Zabidus, came to the Jews, and promised that he would deliver Apollo, the god of Dora, into their hands, and that he would come to our temple, if they would all come up with him, and bring the whole multitude of the Jews with them; that Zabidus made him a certain wooden instrument, and put it round about him, and set three rows of lamps therein, and walked after such a manner, that he appeared to those that stood a great way off him to be a kind of star, walking upon the earth; that the Jews were terribly affrighted at so surprising an appearance, and stood very quiet at a distance; and that Zabidus, while they continued so very quiet, went into the holy house, and carried off that golden head of an ass, (for so facetiously does he write,) and then went his way back again to Dora in great haste." And say you so, sir! as I may reply; then does Apion load the ass, that is, himself, and lays on him a burden of fooleries and lies. (Josephus, Against Apion II:10)

The historian Apion references here is Mnaseas of Patara who wrote about 200 BC. In Mnaseas' native land of Lycia, the ass was associated with Apollo. There was a statue of an ass in the temple of Apollo at Mysia and an ass appears as a votive offering in the Panhellenic temple of Apollo at Delphi. Here, we have one possible explanation for the ass in the temple. Someone could be combining the Jewish god with Apollo.

There is a reference in the Suda, an abstract on a book by Damocritus, called On Jews.

It is unknown exactly when Damocritus lived, but it may have been around the same time as Apion.

Damocritus, historian. Tactics in two books. On Jews, in which he says they used to worship the golden head of an ass, and every seventh year, being idle, they would bring [to the altar] a stranger, and bit by bit cut his flesh, and in this way destroy him. (Suda s.v. Δαμόκριτος, although s.v. 'Ιούδας καὶ 'Ιουδαῖος places the interval at 3 years instead of 7)

When emperors such as Antiochus and Caligula demanded to have their statues put in the Temple, the Jews said images were forbidden in their Temple. A story of a statue being discovered in the Temple therefor would prove the Jews disloyal to the emperor and perhaps the story was invented for precisely this reason.

The Roman historian Tacitus, a contemporary of Josephus, provides another explanation for why the head of the ass was in the temple. He claims that while the Jews were wandering through the desert, they were about to die of dehydration. They were saved when a pack of wild donkeys lead them to water. They therefor made an image of a donkey in their temple to commemorate the occasion.

Nothing, however, distressed them so much as the scarcity of water, and they had sunk ready to perish in all directions over the plain, when a herd of wild asses was seen to retire from their pasture to a rock shaded by trees. Moyses followed them, and, guided by the appearance of a grassy spot, discovered an abundant spring of water. This furnished relief. After a continuous journey for six days, on the seventh they possessed themselves of a country, from which they expelled the inhabitants, and in which they founded a city and a temple. [...] In their holy place they have consecrated an image of the animal by whose guidance they found deliverance from their long and thirsty wanderings. (Tacitus, Histories V:3-4)

The Tacitus account could have been based on an incident described in the Bible. In the midst of a genealogy, we are told in an aside that 'Anah (i.e. "the ass") found water in the desert thanks to some donkeys.

The sons of Zibeon: Aiah and Anah. This is the Anah who discovered the hot springs in the desert while he was grazing the donkeys of his father Zibeon. (Genesis 36:24)

The Tacitus account is also found in the writings of his contemporary Plutarch who says the Jews revered not just the pig, which they refused to eat, but also the ass and hare.

But I should think that if the Jews had such an antipathy against a hog, they would kill it as the magicians do mice; when, on the contrary, they are by their religion as much prohibited to kill as to eat it. And perhaps there may be some reason given for this; for as the ass is worshipped by them as the first discoverer of fountains, so perhaps the hog may be had in like veneration, which first taught them to sow and plough. Nay, some say that the Jews also abstain from hares, as abominable and unclean. They have reason for that, said Lamprias [Plutarch's grandfather], because a hare is so like an ass which they detest; for in its color, ears, and the sparkling of its eyes, it is so like an ass, that I do not know any little creature that represents a great one so much as a hare doth an ass. (Plutarch, Quæstiones Conviviales 4.5.2)

Plurach also claims Bacchus and Apollo are the same god and that the Jews worship him (Quæstiones Conviviales 4.6). This may tie in with the account given by Mnaseas of Patara who connected Jewish ass worship with Apollo.

Writing in the first century BC, Diodorus Siculus tells us that it's not simply an ass or the head of an ass in the temple, Moses himself is depicted riding upon it.

For, say they, Antiochus, surnamed Epiphanes, having subdued the Jews, entered into the temple of God, into which by their law no one was permitted to enter but the priest. Here, when he found the image of a man with a long beard carved in stone sitting on an ass, he conceived it to be Moses who built Jerusalem, established the nation, and made all their impious customs and practices legal: for these abound in hatred and enmity to all other men. Antiochus, therefore, abhorring this their contrary to all other nations, used his utmost endeavour to abrogate their laws. In order to effect this, he sacrificed a large hog at the image of Moses and at the altar of God that stood in the outward court, and sprinkled them with the blood of the sacrifice. He commanded likewise that the sacred books, whereby they were taught to hate all other nations, should be sprinkled with the broth made of the hog's flesh. And he extinguished the lamp called by them immortal, which was continually burning in the temple. Lastly, he compelled the high priest and the other Jews to eat swine's flesh. Afterwards, when Antiochus and his friends had deliberately considered these things, they urged him to root out the whole nation, or at least to abrogate their laws and compel them to change their former mode of conducting themselves in common life. But the king being generous and of a mild disposition, received hostages and pardoned the Jews. He demolished, however, the walls of Jerusalem, and took the tribute that was due.' (Diodorus, fragment from Book 34 of The Library of History)

As Bezalel Bar-Kochva writes (The Image of the Jews in Greek Literature: The Hellenistic Period, also Josephus' Contra Apionem) Diodorus Siculus got this story from Posidonius of Apamea (or possibly Apollonius Molon) who recorded it in the first century BC, who in turn got it from Timochares (circa 129 BC), a Seleucid court historian. Timochares' source was a previous Seleucid court historian who lived during the Hasmonæan revolt (c. 163 BC).

But this isn't the earliest account of the story. Mnaseas of Patara wrote about 200 BC, but the story goes back even further. The translators of the Septuagint (circa 250 - 200 BC) apparently knew of the story and didn't want Moses to be associated with an ass, so they simply changed the word "ass" to something else whenever it appeared. The Hebrew version of Exodus 4:20 reads: "And Moses took his wife and children, mounted them on an ass, and set out for Egypt with the staff of God in his hand" but the Greek of the Septuagint changes "ass" to "beast of burden". The Septuagint also changes the reference to "ass" in Numbers 16:15 to "a desirable object".

And Moses was very wroth, and said unto the LORD, Respect not thou their offering: I have not taken one ass [a desirable object] from them, neither have I hurt one of them. (Numbers 16:15)

There are very few places in the Bible where a word is deliberately changed. The Jews obviously found the association of Moses with asses embarrassing, but why? Was there some truth to the claim that Jews held asses in high regard?

In the Bible, the first born of every mother, both human and animal, must be sacrificed. However, the Bible allows a substitute sacrifice to be made in the cases of donkeys and men.

And every firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a lamb; and if thou wilt not redeem it, then thou shalt break his neck: and all the firstborn of man among thy children shalt thou redeem. (Exodus 13:13)

It's obvious why the Jews wouldn't want to perform human sacrifice like their ancestors, but why do asses get to be redeemed by a substitute sacrifice as well? The answer, my friend, is found in the Talmud.

For they [the asses] supported Israel in the time of the Exodus, for there was not even one in Israel who did not take with him ninety Lybian asses loaded with silver and gold of Egypt. (B. Berakhot 5b, see also Exodus 12:35-36)

We've already discussed a possible association of the Jewish god with Apollo, but Apollo wasn't the only god associated with the ass. The Egyptian god Set-Typhon was sometimes depicted with a donkey head and he has also been more explicitly associated with the Jewish god. For example, we have the following passage from Plutarch:

Those who say that Typhon fled from the battle on an ass for seven days, and having been saved produced sons, Hierosolymus and Judeaus, are at this point clearly dragging Jewish issues into the story. (Plutarch, De Iside et Osiride 363C-D)

In Morton Smith's book, Jesus the Magician, he argues that the association of the Jewish gods with the donkey may have something to do with the Egyptian god Seth. The Egyptians considered Seth the god of foreigners and he is sometimes depicted on magical gems with a donkey head and called Iao, a variant of Yahweh's name. "Iao" may have also been thought to be the sound that a donkey makes.

Also, Manetho's Aegyptiaca (quoted in part by Josephus) written about 270 BC, connects the Jews in general and Moses in particular with the Egyptian god Seth. He tells us the Hyksos (shepherds) withdrew from Egypt, wandered in the desert, and finally settled in Judea where they founded the city of Jerusalem (Against Apion

I:75-90). The Hyksos are elsewhere described as worshipers of Seth.

In addition to being associated with the ass, Typhon is also associated with a certain golden calf. The golden calf incident is explained in Exodus 32:1-20. While Moses goes up the mountain to receive commandments from God, his brother Aaron makes a golden calf for the Israelites to worship. When Moses finds out, he punishes the people by grounding up the calf into powder, putting it into water, and making them drink it. This really isn't fair when you realize that the Israelites hadn't been commanded not to worship graven images yet. Now, if he had punished them the second time they started worshipping golden calves (1 Kings 12:28-33), making them drink gold Kool-Aid would actually make sense. As it is, Moses punishes them for breaking a law which he didn't even know about before he went up to the mountain. Philo tells us the golden calf was meant to be the Egyptian god Typhon.

For when the prophet, after having been called up to the loftiest and most sacred of all the mountains in that district, was divinely instructed in the generic outlines of all the special laws, and was out of sight of his people for many days; those of the people who were not of a peaceable disposition filled every place with the evils which arise from anarchy, and crowned all their iniquity with open impiety, turning into ridicule all those excellent and beautiful lessons concerning the honour due to the one true and living God, and having made a golden bull, an imitation of the Egyptian Typhos, and brought to it unholy sacrifices, and festivals unhallowed, and instituted profane and impious dances, with songs and hymns instead of lamentations. (Philo, The Special Laws 3:125, see also On Drunkenness 95, On Flight and Finding 90, The Special Laws 1:79, and On the Life of Moses 2:159-73)

Perhaps because of this association with Typhon, Josephus omits the golden calf incident from his retelling of the Bible entirely (Antiquities 3:95-101).

Christian Onolatry

Not only Jews, but also Christians were accused of worshiping the head of an ass. Early Christian apologist Minucius Felix wrote a treatise titled Octavius around 150 AD. In it, a Christian named Octavius defends Christianity from a critic named Caecilius.

Caecilius:

I hear that they adore the head of an ass, that basest of creatures, consecrated by I know not what silly persuasion,--a worthy and appropriate religion for such manners. (Octavius, Chapter IX)

Octavius:

This is the business of demons, for by them false rumours are both sown and cherished. Thence arises what you say that you hear, that an ass's head is esteemed among us a divine thing. Who is such a fool as to worship this? Who is so much more foolish as to believe that it is an object of worship? unless that you even consecrate whole asses in your stables, together with your Epona, and religiously devours those same asses with Isis. Also you offer up and worship the heads of oxen and of wethers, and you dedicate gods mingled also of a goat and a man, and gods with the faces of dogs and lions. Do you not adore and feed Apis the ox, with the Egyptians? (Octavius XXVIII)

Like Josephus before him, Minucius Felix also uses the "I'm rubber, you're glue" approach and accuses his critic of being the one who worships animals. Strangely, Tertullian (c. 160 - 225 AD) doesn't deny that Christians worship the head of an ass, although he does use the tried and true apologetic tactic of turning the accusation back around and says his opponents also worship asses.

In the next accusation we are found guilty not just of abandoning our communal faith, but of adding on a monstrosity of superstition. Some of you have entertained the dream that our god is actually the head of an ass. Cornelius Tacitus first launched this fantasy in the fourth book [it's actually the fifth book] of his Histories where he recounts the Jewish war. Starting with the origins of the Jewish people, he traces the source of their religion and its name. He relates how the Jewish people, hard-pressed for water and wondering abroad in desolate places, were delivered by following the lead of a herd of wild asses thought to be in search of water after feeding. For this reason the likeness of this animal is worshiped by the Jew. This is why I believe that we Christians, being linked to the Jewish religion, are associated with the same image. [...]

But what defense do you want from me? I'm admitting now to an occasional transgression that applies equally well to you. Let us suppose that that there is something asinine about our God. You certainly will not deny that you conduct the same worship we do. You in fact worship the ass in its entirety, not just the head. And then you throw in Epona, the patron saint of donkeys and all the beasts of burden, cattle, and wild animals. You even worship their stables. Perhaps this is your charge against us that in the midst of all these indiscriminate animal lovers, we save our devotion for asses alone! (Tertullian, Ad Nationes I:XI, see also Apologeticus XVI)

The onolatry of the Christians isn't just referred to in ancient writings, but also in ancient art. The oldest visual representation of the crucifixion is the Alexamenos graffito scratched onto the plaster of a school room on the Palatine Hill in Rome. It depicts a crucified figure with the head of a donkey and says, "Alexamenos worships [his] god". A little bone crucifix of a crucified donkey has also been found in Montagnana, although it can't be dated. Another graffito, this one drawn in Carthage around 200 AD, depicts a figure with donkey ears and a hoof wrapped in a toga holding a book. This is accompanied by an inscription which reads, "The god of the Christians." Tertullian refers to this image as the Donkey Priest.

There is now a new rumor about our God going the rounds. Recently a most depraved individual from Rome, your city, had defected from his own faith and allowed his skin to be shredded by wild beasts. Every day he would hire himself out for viewing while his skin was stripped. He would carry around a picture directed against us with the heading "Onocoetes," meaning Donkey Priest. It was a picture of a man wearing a toga and the ears of the donkey with a book in hand and one leg ending in a hoof. And the crowd believed this Jewish man. Who else plants the seed of our infamous reputation? As a result the whole city is talking about the Donkey Priest. Since this rumor has been around since yesterday, it lacks any authority of time and is compromised by the character of its author. I shall now gladly use it to refute your charges.

Let us have a look if you are caught up with us in the same folly. If the image we cherish is a freak, it doesn't really matter what kind of freak. You have gods with the head of a dog, the head a lion, the horns of a cow, a ram, or a horny-headed goat. You have goat-form gods, snake-form gods, gods with winged feet, not to mention wings growing out of the brow and out of the back. Many a donkey priest is lurking in your midst.

(Tertullian, Ad Nationes I:XIV)

Tertullian repeats this story in a slightly modified form in his Apologeticus:

But recently in this city, what is really a new representation of our god has been made public, since a certain criminal, hired to trick the wild beasts, exhibited a picture with an inscription to the following effect: 'The Christian God, the Offspring of an Ass.' He had asses' ears, one foot hoofed, was dressed in the toga and carried a book. We laughed both at the name and the figure. But they were bound to worship at once a two-formed divinity, because they have welcomed, as gods, creatures with heads both of dog and of lion, with the horns of a goat and a ram, others with goats' bodies from the loins downwards, and like serpents from the legs, and with wings on the foot or the back.

(Tertullian, Apologeticus XVI)

According to the now lost Gnostic book The Descent of Mary quoted by Epiphanius, the god of the Jews had the form of an ass, which some associated with the demon Sabaoth. Apparently, spying god in his true form is what got Zacharias killed and is the reason Jewish priests wear bells into the temple.

That it was the occasion of the death of Zacharias in the temple, that when he had seen a vision, he, through surprise, was willing to disclose it, and his mouth was stopped. That which he saw was at the time of his offering incense, and it was a man standing in the form of an ass. When he was gone out, and had a mind to speak thus to the people, Woe unto you, whom do ye worship? he who had appeared to him in the temple took away the use of his speech. Afterwards when he recovered it, and was able to speak, he declared this to the Jews, and they slew him. They [the Gnostics] add, that on this very account the high-priest was appointed by their lawgiver (by God to Moses), to carry little bells, that whensoever he went into the temple to sacrifice, he, whom they worshipped, hearing the noise of the bells, might have time enough to hide himself; and not be caught in that ugly shape and figure. (Epiphanius, Panarion, 26:12:1-4)

The Christian may have been associated with the ass simply because the Jewish god was, but another possible reason for the association of Jesus with the ass is found in Rabbinic literature such as the Bereshith Rabba. The rabbis believed there would be two different Messiahs, Messiah Son of David associated with the ass and Messiah Son of Joseph associated with the bull.

Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion, shout, O daughter of Jerusalem; behold, thy king cometh unto thee, He is triumphant and victorious, lowly and riding upon an ass: even upon a colt, the foal of an ass. (Zechariah 9:9)

His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns: with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth: and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh. (Deuteronomy 33:17)

Jesus was thought to be the Messiah ben David by the early Jewish-Christians, so depicting him with the head of an ass makes a certain kind of sense, even if our modern mind believes the ass to be a symbol of stupidity, the ancients obviously didn't see it that way. In line with the Zechariah prophecy, Jesus rides into Jerusalem on an ass (Mark 11:1-11, Luke 19:28-44, John 12:12-19) or according to Matthew, Jesus rides into Jerusalem on two asses at the same time!

And when they drew nigh unto Jerusalem, and were come to Bethphage, unto the mount of Olives, then sent Jesus two disciples, saying unto them, Go into the village over against you, and straightway ye shall find an ass tied, and a colt with her: loose them, and bring them unto me. And if any man say ought unto you, ye shall say, The Lord hath need of them; and straightway he will send them. All this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying, Tell ye the daughter of Sion, Behold, thy King cometh unto thee, meek, and sitting upon an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass. And the disciples went, and did as Jesus commanded them, and brought the ass, and the colt, and put on them their clothes, and they set him thereon. And a very great multitude spread their garments in the way; others cut down branches from the trees, and strawed them in the way. And the multitudes that went before, and that followed, cried, saying, Hosanna to the son of David: Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest. And when he was come into Jerusalem, all the city was moved, saying, Who is this? And the multitude said, This is Jesus the prophet of Nazareth of Galilee. (Matthew 21:1-11)

Jesus trades in his two asses for a white horse in the Book of Revelation.

I saw heaven standing open and there before me was a white horse, whose rider is called Faithful and True. With justice he judges and wages war. His eyes are like blazing fire, and on his head are many crowns. He has a name written on him that no one knows but he himself. He is dressed in a robe dipped in blood, and his name is the Word of God. The armies of heaven were following him, riding on white horses and dressed in fine linen, white and clean. Coming out of his mouth is a sharp sword with which to strike down the nations. "He will rule them with an iron scepter." He treads the winepress of the fury of the wrath of God Almighty. On his robe and on his thigh [often a Biblical euphemism for penis] he has this name written: King of Kings and Lord of Lords. (Revelation 19:11-16)

In his book, the Pre-Nicene New Testament, Robert M. Price notes that unlike the other books of the New Testament, Revelation does not contain second century anachronisms, which makes it the earliest book in the New Testament. It actually has more in common with Jewish apocalyptic literature than Christian writings, so the rider on the white horse could have originally been Yahweh and only later identified with Jesus once Christianity caught on.

The onolatry claim was apparently still current in Renaissance Italy, for the rabbi Simone Luzzatto (1583 - 1663) listed it first in his refutation of anti-Jewish slanders. Although, he explains that the Tacitus story is based on a kernel of truth.

It could have been that since Samson had been a most valiant man and distinguished captain of the Hebrews, after vanquishing a thousand Philistines with the jawbone of an ass, and having been most thirsty, he prayed to God that water might gush out most abundantly from the jawbone, from which he was restored, as can be read in Judges 19 [Actually Judges 15; don't read Judges 19 it's the most horrific chapter in the entire Bible]. In commemoration of so brave an action, the effigy of the head of an ass with water gushing out of it [was placed in the temple.] (Luzzatto, Discorso 60)

That water gushed out of the jawbone isn't explicitly clear in the scripture, but Luzzatto's interpretation is understandable.

Finding a fresh jawbone of a donkey, he grabbed it and struck down a thousand men. Then Samson said, "With a donkey's jawbone I have made donkeys of them. With a donkey's jawbone I have killed a thousand men." When he finished speaking, he threw away the jawbone; and the place was called Ramath Lehi. Because he was very thirsty, he cried out to the Lord, "You have given your servant this great victory. Must I now die of thirst and fall into the hands of the uncircumcised?" Then God opened up the hollow place in Lehi, and water came out of it. When Samson drank, his strength returned and he revived. So the spring was called En Hakkore, and it is still there in Lehi. (Judges 15:15-19)

Luzzatto's explanation is clever since he takes the broad outline of the Tacitus story (a donkey being the instrument of a miraculous deliverance from thirst) and connects it to a scripture. However, his explanation is strained.

I recently thought of another explanation after reading The Great Angel by Margaret Barker. In her book, Barker demonstrates that the early Christians considered Jesus and Yahweh to be the same deity. Thus if Yahweh was depicted with a donkey head, Jesus would be as well.

There is no depiction of Yahweh as a donkey in any ancient carvings that survive, however Yahweh is depicted as a horse that the sun rides upon on the Taanach cult stand. Archeologists have also found horse figurines in Jerusalem not far from the Temple. These figurines depict Yahweh as a horse, sometimes with a sun disk around his head. There is also a terra-cotta horse figurine from Hazor dated to the late tenth century B.C. Statues of horses are also mentioned in the Bible. Apparently they used to be located at the entrance to the Temple, but King Josiah had them removed.

He [Josiah] removed from the entrance to the temple of the Lord the horses that the kings of Judah had dedicated to the sun. They were in the court near the room of an official named Nathan-Melek. Josiah then burned the chariots dedicated to the sun. (2 Kings 23:11)

Since Yahweh was depicted as a sun horse in ancient Israel, it's not that improbable that Jewish critics would ridicule their worship by calling the sun horse an ass. The accusation that Jews worshiped the head of an ass would then be transferred over to the early Christians who believed Jesus and Yahweh were the same person.

In conclusion, we can't really know anything for sure. The claim that Jews worshiped an ass could have come from a number of different sources. Archeology indicates that Yahweh was originally depicted as a horse, which outsiders may have taken for an ass. The story could have originated in Idumea where Apollo was associated with the ass, or from Egypt where Set-Typhon was. The claim might have something to do with the golden calf incident in Exodus. Asses are associated with miracles and prophecies in the Bible and Rabbinic literature associates the Messiah ben David with the ass. Of course the claim could have arisen from something else entirely which has been lost to history. As with most questions dealing with antiquity, we'll just never know for sure.

"Behold the lamb of God who BEARS away the sins of the world." Maybe some translation culturalized lamb to ass for an asinine culture, or someone just thought an ass was a more efficient beast of burden to bear away sins.

The ancient Egyptian king "Akh-n-atn," who ruled Egypt in the 16th century BC was depicted with an elongated face that looks like a donkey's face.

This king is thought to be the first monotheistic in the history. He called to worship one god, and that was the sun disk "Aten."

His poetry is very similar to lyrics and songs associated with "David" and "Solomon." Some scholars believe he was either related to "Abraham" or "Moses," or he was himself the real personality of one of them.

Finally, from the writings of Flavius Josephus, there's indications that the Jews were accused of worshipping a donkey.

Jewish can not sacrifice to God a donkey, a pig, or a horse because those animals are un kleen according to the Low of Moses.

The donkey was a symbol of the order of melchizedek, not yahweh specifically.

What comes to my mind, is that in most religious Orders, there usually is the "inner order" and "outer order." The inner usually has the same practices and beliefs as the outer, but not the other way. This is all around the world and as ancient as ancient.

NOTE

The Egyptian priest Manetho wrote in the middle of the third century BCE, and he produced a monumental history of Egypt in three volumes, of which only a bare-bones outline and a few excerpts survive. This text has been essential for Egyptologists in reconstructing the dynasties of Egypt, and other elements of the fragments have contributed to debates over the builders of the pyramids, the Exodus from Egypt, and other controversies of Biblical interest.

OF THE WRITING OF MANETHO.

It remains, therefore, to make certain extracts concerning the dynasties of the Egyptians, from the writings of Manetho, the Sebennyte, the high-priest of the idolatrous temples of Egypt, in the time of Ptolemaeus Philadelphus. These, according to his own account, he copied from the inscriptions which were engraved, in the sacred dialect and hieroglyphic characters, upon the columns set up in the Seriadic land by Thoth, the first Hermes, (Mercury); and after the Flood, were translated from the sacred dialect into the Greek tongue, in hieroglyphic characters, and committed to writing in books, and deposited by Agathodaemon, the son of the second Hermes, the father of Tat, (Taut of the Phoenician mythology), in the penetralia of the temples of Egypt. He has addressed and explained them to Philadelphus, the second king (of Egypt) who bore the name of Ptolemaeus, in the book which he has entitled Sothis, (or the Dog-star).

This epistle is as follows:--

The Epistle Of Manetho, [1] the Sebennyte, to Ptolemy Philadelphus.

"To the great and august King, Ptolemy Philadelphus: Manetho, the High-priest and Scribe of the sacred adyta in Egypt, being by birth a Sebennyte and a citizen of Heliopolis, to his sovereign Ptolemy, humbly greeting:

"It is right for us, most mighty King, to pay due attention to all things which it is your pleasure we should take into consideration. In answer, then, to your inquiries concerning the things which shall come to pass in the world, I shall, according to your commands, lay before you what I have gathered from the sacred books written by Hermes Trismegistus, our forefather. Farewell, my Prince and Sovereign." --Syncel.

THE EGYPTIAN DYNASTIES

The Dynasty of the Demigods.

The 1st of the Egyptian kings was Hephaestus, who reigned 724 and a half years and four days.

The 2nd was Helios (i.e. the Sun), the son of Hephaestus (who reigned) 86 years.

3rd, Agathodaemon, who reigned 56 and a half years and ten days.

4th, Kronus 40 and a half years.

5th, Osiris and Isis, 35 years.

6th, . . . years.

7th, Typhon, 29 years.

8th, Horus, the demigod, 25 years.

6th, Ares, the demigod, 23 years.

10th, Anubis, the demigod, 17 years.

11th, Heracles the demigod, 15 years.

12th, Apollo, the demigod, 25 years.

13th, Ammon, the demigod, 30 years.

14th, Tithoes, the demigod, 27 years.

15th, Sosus, the demigod, 32 years.

16th, Zeus, the demigod, 20 years. — Syncel. Chron. 19. --Euseb. Chron. 7.

The Egyptian Dynasties After the Deluge

The First Dynasty.

After the dead demigods, the first dynasty consisted of eight kings.

1. The first was Menes the Thinite; he reigned 62 years, and perished by a wound received from a hippopotamus.
2. Athothis, his son, reigned 57 years; he built the palaces at Memphis, and left the anatomical books, for he was a physician.
3. Kenkenes, his son, reigned 31 years.
4. Venephes, his son, reigned 23 years. In his time a great plague raged through Egypt. He erected the pyramids near Cochome.
5. Usaphaetus, his son, reigned 20 years.
6. Miebidus, his son, reigned 26 years.
7. Sememphis, his son, reigned 18 years. In his reign a terrible pestilence afflicted Egypt.
8. Bieneches, his son, reigned 26 years.

The whole number of years amounted to 253 [or 263, according to the true reckoning].

The Second Dynasty

Consisted of nine Thinite kings.

1. Boethus the First reigned 38 years. During his reign a chasm of the earth opened near Bubastus, and many persons perished.
2. Kaeachos reigned 39 years. Under him the bulls, Apis in Memphis, and Meneus, (Mnevis), in Heliopolis, and the Mendesian goat, were appointed to be gods.
3. Binothis reigned 47 years. In his time it was decided that women might hold the imperial government.
4. Tlas reigned 17 years.
5. Sethenes reigned 41 years.
6. Chaeres {reigned} 17 years.
7. Nephcheres (reigned) 25 years. In his time it is said that the Nile flowed with honey during eleven days.
8. Sesochris, whose height was five cubits and his breadth three, (reigned) 48 years.
9. Cheneres 30 years.

The whole number of years is 302.

The Third Dynasty, of Nine Memphite Kings.

1. Necherophes reigned 28 years. In his time the Libyans revolted from the Egyptians; but, on account of an unexpected increase of the moon, they surrendered themselves for fear.
2. Tosorthrus reigned 29 years. He is called Asclepius [i.e., Aesculapius], by the Egyptians, for his medical knowledge. He built a house of hewn stones, and greatly patronised writing.
3. Tyrus reigned 7 years.
4. Mesochris 17 years.

5. Soiphis [or, Souphis] 16 years.
6. Tosertasis 19 years.
7. Achis [or, Aches] 42 years.
8. Siphuris 30 years.
9. Kerperhes 26 years. Altogether 214 years.

The Fourth Dynasty,
Of eight Memphite kings of a different race.

1. Soris reigned 29 years.
 2. Suphis reigned 63 years. He built the largest pyramid, which Herodotus says was constructed by Cheops. He was arrogant toward the gods, and wrote the sacred book; which is regarded by the Egyptians as a work of great importance.
 3. Suphis reigned 66 years.
 4. Mencheres (Men-ke-ra) 63 years.
 5. Ratoeses 25 years.
 6. Bicherer 22 years.
 7. Sebercheres 7 years.
 8. Thamphthis 9 years.
- Altogether 274 years [or 284, according to the correct computation.]

The Fifth Dynasty,
Consisting of nine Elephantine kings.

1. Usercheris reigned 28 years.
2. Sefres 13 years.
3. Nephcheres 20 years.
4. Sisiris 7 years.
5. Cheres 20 years.
6. Rathuris 44 years.
7. Mencheres 9 years.
8. Tarcheres [or, Tatcherer] 44 years.
9. Obnos [or, Onnos] 33 years. Altogether 248 years [or, 218 years.]

The Sixth Dynasty,
Consisting of six Memphite kings.

1. Othoes, 30 years, who was killed by his guards.
 2. Phius reigned 53 years.
 3. Methusuphis 7 years.
 4. Phiops, who began to reign at six years of age, and reigned till he had completed his hundredth year.
 5. Menthesuphis reigned one year.
 6. Nitocris, who was the most handsome woman of her time, of a fair complexion; she built the third pyramid, and reigned 12 years.
- Altogether 203 years.

The Seventh Dynasty,
Of seventy Memphite kings, who reigned 70 days.

The Eighth Dynasty,
Of twenty-seven Memphite kings, who reigned 146 years.

The Ninth Dynasty,
Of nineteen Heracleotic kings, who reigned 409 years.

1. The first was Achthoes, the worst of all his predecessors. He did much harm to all the inhabitants of Egypt, was seized with madness, and killed by a crocodile.

The Tenth Dynasty,
Consisting of nineteen Heracleotic kings, who reigned 185 years.

The Eleventh Dynasty,
Consisting of sixteen Diospolite, (or Theban), kings, who reigned 43 years.
Among them Ammenemes, who reigned 16 years.

The sum total of the above-named kings is 192, who reigned 2,308 years and 70 days.
--From Syncellus Chronicon, 54 to 59 --Euseb. Chron., 14 and 15.

THE SECOND BOOK OF MANETHO

The Twelfth Dynasty,
Of seven Diospolite, (or Theban), kings.

1. Geson Goses [or, Sesonchosis; or, Sesortosis; or, Sesortosis], the son of Ammanemes. He reigned 46 years.
2. Ammanemes reigned 38 years. He was slain by his eunuchs.
3. Sesostri 41 [or, 48] years. He conquered all Asia in nine years, and Europe as far as Thrace; everywhere erecting monuments of his conquests of those nations; statues of men among nations who acted bravely, but among the degenerate he erected figures of women, engraving their sexual organs upon the pillars. By the Egyptians he is supposed to be the first after Osiris.
4. Lachares 8 years, who built the Labyrinth in Arsinoite [sic] as a tomb for himself.
5. Ammeres reigned 8 years.
6. Ammenemes 8 years.
7. Skemiophris, his sister, 4 years. Altogether 160 years.

The Thirteenth Dynasty
Consisted of 60 Diospolite, (or Theban), kings, whose names are lost. They reigned 453 years (according to the Armenian copy of Eusebius).

The Fourteenth Dynasty.
Consisting of 76 Xoite kings, who ruled 184 [or, 484] years. (The number 484 is from the Armenian version of Eusebius.)
The names are entirely lost.

The Fifteenth [2] Dynasty
Of the Hyk-shos or Shepherd-Kings. There were six foreign, i.e., Phoenician or Canaanitish kings. This dynasty took Memphis, and built a city in the Sethroite nome, whence they made an invasion, and conquered all Egypt. Of these--

1. Saiites [or, Salatis] reigned 19 years, after whom the Saite nome or district is called.
2. Beon [or, Bnon] reigned 44 years.
3. Pachnan [or, Apachnas] 61 years.
4. Staan 50 years.
5. Archies [or, Assis] 49 years.
6. Aphobis [or, Apophis] 61 years. Altogether 284 years.

The Sixteenth Dynasty

Of 32 Grecian shepherds, who reigned 518 years.

The Seventeenth Dynasty

Consisted of 43 shepherd-kings and 43 Thebans, [or, Diospolites.]

The Shepherds and Thebans reigned altogether 151 years.

The Eighteenth Dynasty,

Of sixteen Diospolite, (or, Theban), kings.

1. Amos; in whose time Moses went forth from Egypt, as we have shown.
2. Chebros 13 years.
3. Amenophthis 24 years.
4. Amersis [or, Amensis] 22 years.
5. Misaphris 13 years.
6. Misphragmuthosis 26 years, in whose time the Flood of Deucalion happened.
7. Tuthmosis reigned 9 years.
8. Amenophis 31 years. He is supposed to be the Memnon, to whom the musical statue [3] (in Egypt) was erected.
9. Horus reigned 37 years.
10. Acherrhes [or, Akenchres] 32 years.
11. Rathos [or, Rathotis] 6 years.
12. Chebres 12 years.
13. Acherrhes [or, Akenchres] 12 years.
14. Armesses [or, Armais] 5 years.
15. Ramesses 1 year.
16. Amenoph [or, Amenophath] 19 years. Altogether 263 [or, 259].

The Nineteenth Dynasty,

Consisted of seven Diospolite, (or Theban), kings. 1. Sethos reigned 51 years.

2. Rapsakes [or, Rampses] 61 years.
 3. Ammenephthes 20 years.
 4. Rameses 60 years.
 5. Ammenemnes [or, Ammenemes] 5 years.
 6. Thuoris, who is called by Homer, Polybus.
 7. Alcandrus, 7 years, in whose time Ilion, (i.e., Troy), was taken.
- Altogether 209 years.

In this second book of Manetho are contained 96 kings, and 2121 years. --Syncel.

Chron. 59 to 75. —Euseb. Chron. 15 to 17.

THE THIRD BOOK OF MANETHO

The Twentieth Dynasty,

Of 12 Diospolite, (or Theban), kings, who reigned 135 years.

The Twenty-first Dynasty,

Of seven Tanite kings.

1. Smedes [or, Smendes] reigned 26 years.

2. Psusenes, or Psuneses, 46 years.

3. Nephhercheres 4 years.

4. Amenophthis 9 years.

5. Osochor 6 years.

6. Psinaches 9 years.

7. Susenes [or, Psusennes] 30 years.

Altogether 130 years.

The Twenty-second Dynasty,

Of nine Bubastite kings.

1. Sesonchis (or Shishak) [4] 21 years.

2. Osoroth [or, Osorthon] 15 years.

3, 4, 5. Three others reigned 25 years.

6. Takellothis [5] 13 years.

7, 8, 9. Three others 42 years.

Altogether reigned 120 years.

The Twenty-Third Dynasty,

Of four Tanite kings.

1. Petoubates reigned 40 years, in whose time the Olympiads began.

2. Osorcho 8 years, whom the Egyptians call Hercules.

3. Psammus 10 years.

4. Zeet 31 years.

Altogether 89 years.

The Twenty-Fourth Dynasty.

Bocchoris, [or Bonchoris], the Saite, reigned 6 years, in whose reign (a miracle occurred), for a sheep spoke.

Total 990 years.

The Twenty-Fifth Dynasty,

Consisted of 3 Ethiopic kings.

1. Sabbakon, who having taken Bocchoris captive, burnt him alive, and reigned 8 years.

2. Sevechus, [6] his son, who reigned 14 years.

3. Tarkos, or Tarakos [Tirhakah], [7] 18 years.

Altogether 40 years.

The Twenty-Sixth Dynasty,

Consisting of 9 Saite kings.

1. Stephinates reigned 7 years.
2. Nechepsos reigned 6 years.
3. Nechao (or Necho) 8 years.
4. Psammitichus 54 years.
5. Nechao, (or Necho), the 2nd reigned 6 years. He took Jerusalem, and carried away captive Joahaz, the king, to Egypt.
6. Psammuthis 6 years.
7. Vaphris (or Hophra) 19 years, to whom the remainder of the Jews fled when Jerusalem was taken by the Assyrians.
8. Amosis 44 years.
9. Psammacherites [8] 6 months. Altogether 150 years and six months.

The Twenty-seventh Dynasty,
Of eight Persian kings.

1. Cambyses reigned over Persia, his own kingdom, 5 years, and over Egypt 6 years.
2. Darius, the son of Hystaspes, 36 years.
3. Xerxes the Great 21 years.
4. Artabanus 7 months. [9]
5. Artaxerxes 41 years.
6. Xerxes 2 months.
7. Sogdianus 7 months.
8. Darius, the son of Xerxes, 19 years. Altogether 124 years and four months.

The Twenty-Eighth Dynasty.
Amyrteos, the Saite, reigned 6 years.

The Twenty-Ninth Dynasty,
Consisting of four Mendesian kings.

1. Nepherites reigned 6 years.
 2. Achoris 13 years.
 3. Psammuthis 1 year.
 4. Nephorites 4 months.
 5. Muthis 1 year.
- Altogether 20 years and four months.

The Thirtieth Dynasty,
Consisting of three Sebennyte kings. 1. Nectanebes reigned 18 years.

2. Teds 2 years.
3. Nectanebos 18 years. Altogether 38 years.

The Thirty-First Dynasty,
Consisting of three Persian kings.

1. (Darius) Ochus, who ruled Persia 20 years and Egypt two years.
2. Arses, or Arses Ochus, (or Artaxerxes), reigned 3 years.
3. Darius 4 years. Altogether 9 years. Total 1,050 years.

From Syncell. Chron. 73 to 78 and Euseb. Chron. 16, 17.

OF THE SHEPHERD KINGS

"We had formerly a king whose name was Timaus. In his time it came to pass, I know not how, that God was displeased with us: and there came up from the East, in a strange manner, men of an ignoble race, who had the confidence to invade our country, and easily subdued it by their power, without a battle. 'And, when they had our rulers in their hands, they burnt our cities, and demolished the temples of the gods, and inflicted every kind of barbarity upon the inhabitants, slaying some, and reducing the wives and children of others to a state of slavery. At length they made one of themselves king, whose name was Salatis: he lived at Memphis, and rendered both the upper and lower regions of Egypt tributary, and stationed garrisons in places which were best adapted for that purpose. But he directed his attention principally to the security of the eastern frontier; for he regarded with suspicion the increasing power of the Assyrians, who, he foresaw, would one day undertake an invasion of the kingdom. And, observing in the Saite nome, upon the east of the Bubastite channel, a city which from some ancient theological reference was called Avaris; and finding it admirably adapted to his purpose, he rebuilt it, and strongly fortified it with walls, and garrisoned it with a force of two hundred and fifty thousand armed men. To this city Salatis repaired in summer time, to collect his tribute, and pay his troops, and to exercise his soldiers, in order to strike terror into foreigners.

And Salatis died after a reign of nineteen years; after him reigned Beon forty-four years; and he was succeeded by Apachnas, who reigned thirty-six years and seven months; after him reigned Apophis sixty-one years, and Iantias fifty years and one month. After all these reigned Assis forty-nine years and two months. These six were the first rulers amongst them, and, during all the period of their dynasty, they made war upon the Egyptians, in hope of exterminating the whole race. All this nation was styled Hyk-shos, that is, the Shepherd-Kings; for the first syllable, Hyk, according to the sacred dialect, denotes king, and sos signifies a shepherd; but this according to the vulgar tongue; and, of these two words is compounded the term Hyk-shos, whom some say were Arabians. This people, thus denominated Shepherd-Kings, and their descendants retained possession of Egypt for the space of 511 years.

After these things, he (Manetho), relates that the kings of Thebais, and of the other parts of Egypt, made an insurrection against the Shepherds; and, that a long and mighty war was carried on between them, till the Shepherds were subdued by a king whose name was Alisphragmuthosis; and, that they were by him driven out of the rest of Egypt, and shut up within a space containing ten thousand acres, which was called Avaris. All this tract of country, (says Manetho), the Shepherds surrounded with a vast and strong wall, that they might retain all their possessions and their booty within a fortress.

And Thummosis, the son of Alisphragmuthosis, endeavoured to force them by a siege, and beleaguered the place with a body of four hundred and eighty thousand men; but, at the moment when he despaired of reducing them by siege, they agreed to a capitulation, that they would leave Egypt, and should be permitted to go out, without molestation, wheresoever they pleased. And, according to this stipulation, they departed from Egypt with all their families and effects, in number not less than two hundred and forty thousand, and bent their way through the desert towards Syria. But, as they stood in fear of the Assyrians, who had then dominion over Asia, they built a city, in that country which is now called Judaea, of sufficient size to contain this multitude of men, and named it Jerusalem.

(In another book of the Egyptian histories, Manetho says), That this people, who are here called Shepherds, in their sacred books were also styled Captives.

After the departure of this nation of Shepherds to Jerusalem, Tethmosis, the king of Egypt, who drove them out, reigned twenty-five years and four months, and then died; after him his son, Chebron, took the government into his hands for thirteen years; after him reigned Amenophis for twenty years and seven months; then his sister Amesses, 21 years and nine months.

She was succeeded by Mephres, who reigned 12 years and nine months; after him Mephramuthosis, who reigned 25 years and 10 months ; then Thmosis, who reigned nine years and eight months; after whom Amenophis reigned 30 years and 10 months; then Orus (Horus), who reigned 36 and five months; then his daughter Akenchres, who reigned 12 years and one month; and after her, Rathotis for nine years; then Akencheres 12 years and five months, and another Akencheres 12 years and three months; after him, Armais reigned four years and one month; and Ramesses (the Great) one year and four months; then Armesses, (i.e., Ramses), the son of Miammoun, who reigned 66 years and two months; after him Amenophis for 19 years and six months; he was succeeded by Sethosis, who is called Ramesses, who maintained an army of cavalry and a naval force.

This king, (Sethosis), appointed his brother Armais as his viceroy over Egypt. He also invested him with all the other authority of a king, but with the following restrictions, viz.—1st, That he should not wear the crown; 2nd, Nor interfere with the queen, the mother of his children; 3rd, Nor abuse the royal concubines. Sethosis then made an expedition against the island of Cyprus, and Phoenicia, and waged war with the Assyrians and Medes; and he subdued them all, some by force of arms, and others without a blow, by the mere terror of his power. And being puffed up with his success, he advanced still more confidently, and overthrew the cities, and subdued the countries of the East.

But Armais, who was left in Egypt, took advantage of the opportunity, and fearlessly committed all those acts which his brother had enjoined him not to do; he violated the queen, and continued an unrestrained intercourse with the concubines, and, at the persuasion of his friends, he assumed the diadem, and openly opposed his brother.

But the ruler over the priests of Egypt sent to Sethosis, and informed him of what had happened, and how his brother had set himself up in opposition to his power. Upon this Sethosis immediately returned to Pelusium, and recovered his kingdom. The country of Egypt took its name from Sethosis, who was called also Ægyptus, as was his brother Armais known by the name of Danaus.” [10]

--Joseph, contr. Ap. lib. I. c. 14, 15.

OF THE ISRAELITES

“This king, (Amenophis), was desirous of beholding the gods, since Horus, one of his predecessors in the kingdom had seen them. He communicated his desire to a priest of the same name with himself, Amenophis, the son of Papis; one who seemed to partake of the divine nature, both in his wisdom and in his knowledge of futurity.

Amenophis returned him for answer, that he might behold the gods if he would cleanse the land of all lepers, and other unclean persons that were in it. Well pleased with this information, the king gathered together out of the land of Egypt all that laboured under any defect of body, to the number of 80,000, and sent them to the quarries, (in the Mafra, or, Sinaitic peninsula), which are situated on the east side of the Nile, that they might work in them, and be separated from the rest of the Egyptians.

And he, (Manetho), says, there were among them some learned priests who were (also) infected with the leprosy. And Amenophis, the wise man and prophet, fearing lest the vengeance of the gods should fall, both on himself and on the king, should it appear that violence had been used towards them, added this also in a prophetic spirit;—that certain people would come to the assistance of these polluted wretches, and would subdue Egypt, and hold it in possession for thirteen years. These tidings however he dared not to communicate to the king, but left in writing an account of what should come to pass, and destroyed himself; at which the king was fearfully distressed.

‘(After which, he writes thus, word for word): When those that were sent to work in the quarries had continued for some time in that miserable state, the king was petitioned to set apart for their habitation and protection the city Avaris, which had been left desolate by the Shepherds; and he granted them their desire: now this city, according to the ancient theology, is a Typhonian [11] city.

When these men had taken possession of the city, and found it well adapted for a revolt, they appointed over themselves a ruler out of the priests of Heliopolis, [12] one whose name was Osarsiph, [13] and they bound themselves by oath that they would be obedient. Osarsiph then, in the first place enacted this law, that they should neither worship the [Egyptian] gods, nor abstain from {eating} any of those sacred animals which the Egyptians hold in the highest veneration, but sacrifice and slay them all; and that they should connect themselves with none but such as were of that confederacy. When he had made such laws as these, and many others of a tendency directly in opposition to the customs of the Egyptians, he gave orders that they should employ the multitude of hands in rebuilding the walls about the city (Avaris), and hold themselves in readiness for war with Amenophis the king; whilst he (Osarsiph) took into his confidence and counsels some others of the priests and unclean persons. He then sent ambassadors to the city called Jerusalem; to those Shepherds who had been expelled by Tethmosis, [14] whereby he informed them of the affairs of himself, and of the others who had been treated in the same ignominious manner, and requested they would come with one consent, to his assistance in this war against Egypt. He also promised in the first place to reinstate them in their ancient city and country, Avaris, and provide a plentiful maintenance for their numerous host, and fight for them as occasion might require. He informed them, moreover, that they could easily reduce the land (of Egypt) under their dominion. The Shepherds received this message with the greatest joy, and quickly mustered to the number of 200,000 men, and came up to Avaris. Now Amenophis, king of Egypt, when he was informed of their invasion, was in great consternation, remembering the prophecy of Amenophis, the son of Papis, and he assembled the armies of the Egyptians, and took counsel with the leaders, and commanded the sacred animals to be brought to him, especially those which were held in the greatest veneration in the temples, and particularly charged the priests to conceal the images of their gods with the utmost care. And his son Sethos, who was also called Ramesses from his father Rampses, being but five years old he committed to the protection of a friend. And he marched with the rest of the Egyptians, being three hundred thousand warriors, against the enemy, who advanced to meet him; but he did not attack them, thinking it would be to wage war against the gods, but he returned, and came again to Memphis, where he took Apis, (the sacred bull), and the other sacred animals he had sent for, and retreated immediately into Ethiopia, together with all his army, and all the multitude of the Egyptians: for the king of Ethiopia was under obligations to him, wherefore he received him kindly, and took care of all the multitude that was with him, while the country supplied all that was necessary for their food. He also allotted to him cities and villages during his exile, which was to continue from its beginning during the predestined thirteen years. Moreover, he pitched a camp for an Ethiopian army upon the borders of Egypt, as a protection to king Amenophis.

While such was the state of things in Ethiopia, the people of Jerusalem, having come down in company with the unclean of the Egyptians, treated the inhabitants with such barbarity that those who witnessed their impieties believed that their joint sway was more execrable than that which the Shepherds (alone) had formerly exercised. They not only set fire to the cities and villages, but committed every kind of sacrilege, and destroyed the images of the gods, and roasted and fed upon those sacred animals that were worshipped; and having compelled the priests and prophets to kill and sacrifice them, they cast them naked out of the country.

It is also said that the priest who ordained their polity and laws was by birth a native of Heliopolis, and that he was named Osarsiph, from Osiris, the god venerated at Heliopolis. He adds, however, that when he went over to these people his name was changed, and he was called Moyses (Mouses or Moses). Manetho again says, 'after this Amenophis returned from Ethiopia with a great force, and Rampses his son also, with other forces, and encountering the Shepherds and the unclean people, they defeated them, and slew multitudes of them, and pursued the remainder to the borders of Syria (Judea).'

--From Josephus against Apion. Book i., cap. 27.

NOTES

[1] This Epistle is now generally regarded as that of the pseudo-Manetho; not the Manetho who wrote the lists of kings, but one who assumed and abused his name.

[2] This is the Seventeenth Dynasty according to Eusebius.

[3] The researches of Pococke and Hamilton have long since proved this to be the Memnon of the Ancients, while the hieroglyphic labours of Champollion have established the claims of Amenoph to the statues he erected.

[4] See 1 Kings xi. 40.

[5] Perhaps Tiglath Pileser, king of Assyria, or some one ruling as a tributary to the Assyrian monarch.

[6] Called So, or Seve, in 2 Kings xvii. 4.

[7] 2 Kings xix. 9.

[8] Eusebius omits the last king, and inserts Ammeres at the beginning as the first.

[9] Eusebius omits Artabanus, and between Cambyses and Darius places the Magi, with a reign of seven months.

[10] Danaus was the first king of the Argives.

[11] Typhon was the Ahriman, or Satan, of the Egyptian theology. "Down to the time of Rameses, B.C. 1300, he was one of the most venerated and powerful gods. After about 970 B.C. he was regarded as the foe of Osiris and all the gods of Egypt."—Bunsen's Egypt's Place, vol. i., p. 456.

[12] Called On in Genesis xli. 45, 50; An in Egyptian.

[13] By Osarsiph he means Moses, the Jewish lawgiver and deliverer.

[14] Tethmosis was a sovereign of the 18th dynasty, according to Eusebius.

THE EPITOME OF MANETHO FROM THE EXCERPTS IN BAD LATIN

translated from the Greek (c. 500) for the Merovingian Kings (c. 750)

Of all kingdoms, we find that of the Egyptians to be the most ancient; of whose beginning we purpose to write, according to the relation of Manetho.

The first dynasty was that of the Gods, who are classed by themselves; and I reckon their reigns thus:

Some say the God Ifestus reigned in Egypt 680 years. After him, the Sun, the son of Ifestus, 77 years. After him, Osinosiris, 420 years. After him, Oros Stoliarchus, 28 years.

After him, Typhon, 45 years. The sum of the reigns of the Gods amounts to 1550 years.

Then succeeds the kingdom of the Demi-gods, thus: First reigned Anubis Amusira, who composed the writings of the Egyptians, 83 years. After him, Apion Grammaticus, who reigned 77 years. In his reign commenced the kingdom of Argos, under Inachus. Afterwards, the kings of the Encynii, by whom must be understood the Demi-gods. They reigned 2100 years. This is the end of the first volume of Manetho, which contains a period of 2100 years.

Mireus and seven of his descendants reigned 253 years. Then reigned eight others 302 years. Necherocheus and eight others reigned 214 years. Likewise seventeen others, 214 years. Likewise twenty-one others, 258 years. Othoi and seven others, 203 years. Likewise fourteen others, 140 years. Likewise twenty others, 409 years. Likewise seven others, 204 years. Dynasty of Diospolites, 9 years. Dynasty of Bubastites, 153 years. Dynasty of Tanites, 184 years. Dynasty of Sebennites, 224 years. Dynasty of Memphites, 318 years. Dynasty of Iliopolites, 221 years. Dynasty of Ermupolites, 260 years.

The second volume enumerates to the 17th dynasty, and contains a period of 1520 years.

These are the Dynasties of Egypt.

Relaxation is not the goal. It is the mechanism.

Relaxation releases attachment.

Attachments are the stories you tell about things.

Negative stories create negative attachments.

Positive stories create positive attachments.

The problem is never the thing itself.

The problem is the mental stranglehold you place on the story about it.

Releasing negative attachments is sufficient to end negative manifestations for anyone willing to apply this.

Identification is simple.

Notice negative emotion.

Trace the thought attached.

Find the underlying presumption.

You will not catch most of them at first.

That is expected.

Once the presumption is seen, change your mind.

You do not need the correct conclusion.

Only a better feeling one.

The fastest method is to relax in the presence of the thought as if it has already been resolved.

Relief arises because the opposite is equally true.

Meditation helps because it cultivates trust in yourself and in reality.

There is no correct path. Only the path

This process is subjective and must be experienced directly.

I will continue articulating this path with increasing clarity.

all souls are made of primordial, eternal Light not metaphorical light, but the first substance of existence. Light is consciousness before form or identity before name. christians make me angry sure and atheists piss me off, but nihilist? Yeah those edgy fucks really piss me off. I've seen and experienced some strange shit in my time to know theres at least something after this. I can give most christians a pass desu because I know a decent amount of ya'll are good folk who know to live by the new testament and not the old one, the difference between a atheist and a nihilist is that atheist are people who don't believe in the abrahamic god but they tend to be buddhist or some other faith. Nihilism is where you believe in absolutely nothing. Atheists are emo Nihilist are goths. Get the point yet?

The image is a cartoon-style illustration featuring a character standing against a backdrop of a clear blue sky with scattered white clouds. The character is a muscular man with a bald head, wearing sunglasses and a red tank top with the word "CHU" written on it. He is looking directly at the viewer with a serious expression. To the left of the character, there is a yellow diamond-shaped sign with black text that reads "Bright Future Ahead." The sign is attached to a metal pole. The overall style of the image is cartoonish and seems to be a humorous or satirical representation.

[5 / 2]The image is a high-resolution photograph capturing a vast snowy landscape. The foreground shows a snow-covered valley with patches of bare ground and scattered trees. The valley is surrounded by snow-covered mountains that rise in the background. The sky is clear with a few scattered clouds. The overall color palette is dominated by the white of the snow, with the mountains in varying shades of gray and brown. There are no texts or discernible human-made objects in the image. The photograph appears to be taken from a high vantage point, possibly from a plane or helicopter, as suggested by the perspective and the vastness of the scene.

Hello people, I'm here to talk about a rather curious case I remember from years ago. I'm from Brazil and I remember watching a video in Portuguese when I was younger — probably around 2013–2014 — where, among many mysteries discussed, there was one about a region called the “Slave Craton,” located in northwestern Canada, where a series of mysterious disappearances had supposedly occurred in the mid-2000s.

I remember the guy in the video saying that human semen had been found in some areas of the region and that, apparently, people would go to this place and, upon arriving, would experience some kind of strange sexual urge before completely disappearing without a trace. As far as I recall, Canadian authorities had given some explanation that it was just people engaging in sexual activity in the area, but the whole thing was very bizarre, and the legend had already been circulating among residents of nearby towns. The people were never found, and the case was eventually forgotten.

When I searched years later, I couldn't find any information about it, and I'm here hoping someone else might have heard about this or at least clarify whether this is a true story or just a false one. Thanks in advance.

The image is a page from a book or publication, featuring three illustrations of human feet and a mask. The illustration on the left shows a human foot with a detailed foot structure, labeled with various anatomical terms such as "E" for the external side of the foot, "E" for the middle side, and "E" for the inner side. The illustration on the right shows a human foot with a similar foot structure, labeled with the same anatomical terms. The third illustration on the right shows a human foot with a different foot structure, labeled with the same anatomical terms.

The text below the illustrations is in English and discusses the archaeological evidence for the presence of the ancient civilization of the Dzungarian Celts in Asia. It mentions that the Dzungarian Celts were known for their monumental stone monuments, such as the Great Wall of China, and for their use of stone tools. The text also refers to the discovery of a mask from the Dzungarian Celts, which is described as a "stone mask" with a "stone face" and a "stone head." The text concludes with a note that the mask is being used as a model for a new study on the use of stone tools in the ancient world. The image is in black and white, and the text is in a serif font, which is typical for historical or academic texts. The style of the image is reminiscent of historical illustrations, possibly from a book or a museum exhibit, aimed at providing a visual representation of the subject matter discussed in the text.

[6 / 2]The image shows a statue of a classical male figure, likely from ancient Greece or Rome, standing in a pose that suggests a sense of authority or leadership. The figure is depicted with a muscular build, wearing a draped robe that falls to the ground, and a draped garment that drapes over the left shoulder. The statue is made of white marble, and the figure's hair is styled in a curly, flowing manner. The figure's right hand is raised, holding a scroll or a similar object, while the left hand is placed on its hip. The background is a neutral, light-colored wall, and the lighting casts shadows on the statue, emphasizing its form and texture. There are no visible texts or inscriptions on the statue. The style of the image is a clear, well-lit photograph, likely taken in a museum or gallery setting to showcase the statue's details and craftsmanship.

A few years ago, when I was 19 years old, I was sitting on a swing set in my backyard that was there since I was a kid. I was thinking about Zeus, and asking myself if he could be real and that the Greek Olympians were the true Gods. Just then, the frame above broke inward and fell, almost killing me but missed by a few inches. What did this mean? Did Zeus save me or was it another God warning me not to follow him?

The Virgin Mary plays such a sacred part of Jesus life story in throughout the New Testament. I received this painting after completing my first communion at Catholic grade school in 2000. Why don't other Christian denominations recognize the fundamental history and significance of Mary?

As a Catholic, I've always been curious about the differing emphases between Catholic and Protestant traditions particularly why Mary and Joseph, who play such central roles in the Incarnation narrative, tend to receive far less theological and devotional focus in many Protestant churches. How do Protestants and other Christian based faiths understand the spiritual significance of Jesus' parents within their broader Christ-centered theology?

What's up with your pic?

I found the original on Reddit and it doesn't have all those weird artifacts like the top left angel being deformed, the letter S being missing in "US" at the top left and not to mention the deformed halo.

But even just the painting itself feels weird. Forgive my saying, but this is the creepiest icon I've ever seen. I understand the theological implications of Jesus' lamb-face and Adamic reference, but just the way he looks, the apple he's holding, the way Mary looks, it's all just messed up.

Surely this was intentional and you're being facetious.

Get on your knees and pray for help, I was struggling with heavy xanax addiction, prayed full of emotion and next day woke up feeling amazing, unfortunately the fire extinguished and the sleep paralysis came back cause I used Jesus as an excuse for sin but then I did the same thing when I was sick and tired of being bound by lust, started taking Christianity seriously, spiritual warfare ramped up early on but the more you get in the word the easier it is to fight the devil and his minions

Luke 10:19 and James 4:7 are the most motivating verses against spiritual warfare

Part of this is there are peptides produced by the human body that cause stress that last for months before degrading, I was just reading that in an article the other day. I have theorized this to be the case since I was 5 and that some people are genetically predisposed to that stress from those peptides, if left unchecked, setting of a cycle of self-reinforcing stress via the peptides repeatedly being released over and over due to the stress caused by the very same peptides. In other words once you get scared enough there's no going back, you're changed. Forever. Well for a life time, unless we can use occult powers to fix it or they make a pill for it.

I remember Satan yelling at me and laughing and threatening and the world shaking and my vision going a little dark while my mom choked me against the wall because I tried to care about her and her boyfriend breaking up and she yelled that she'd kill me when I was very small and I really haven't been the same since then. It's kept alive, safer then I would have been, made me a challenge for my foes, but it is tiresome. It's like there are pleasures in naive innocence that I'm jealous that other people enjoy.

I can't stand it anytime anyone takes an interest in anything anyone else thinks, because it's my understanding nobody has really ever done that for me and I read somewhere to treat others as they treat you, or something like that.

The image is a black and white illustration featuring a character with long hair and a serious expression. The character is wearing a hooded cloak with a visible belt and a belt buckle. The character's eyes are closed, and the eyebrows are drawn in a downward direction. The character's mouth is slightly open, and the character's nose is slightly pointed. The character is holding a sword with one hand, which is drawn in a way that suggests motion. The background is cloudy and indistinct, with the focus on the character. There are no texts or other discernible details in the image. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of manga or comic book art, with a focus on character expression and action.

Those entities are called Egregores, Thoughtforms, Pendulums or Spirit Parasites. The word 'demon' just means spirit. Agathodemons are guardian spirits and Cacodemons are harmful spirits.

Neither one has a conscience, set of morals or ethics. Think of them like single celled organisms that only know how to feed on energy. They get energy by triggering an emotion in a human/host. Usually negative, those ones you will notice the most. It's very obvious when you have a negative thought that feels like it came from nowhere, for no reason, and doesn't belong to you. Finding yourself in an imaginary argument over something stupid? Likely one of these things triggering that in you to generate a certain type of frequency to keep you in that frequency and feed off your energy.

The goal is to raise your frequency/vibration. Meditation, thought exercises and etc. will help you. These things try 2-3 times to induce you to a frequency they can feed on you from, then they flee because otherwise they are at risk of you sapping their strength.

The most successful technique I've had is becoming impartial to the thought. Imagining myself in a stupid argument with an aggressive asshat in a lineup? Label it:

"anger/frustration" Then just sort of mentally stare at it without reaction. Your thought sort of gets "awkward" and vanishes. It might resurface again within the hour. Repeat the process. Observe the thought like you're waiting for it to make a move. It won't. Don't associate with it. You are NOT your thoughts. Your brain is a machine that GENERATES thoughts. By using this strategy to tell your brain "this thought/emotion is useless and irrelevant right now", it will dissolve it.

There are other strategies, meditation chief among them, that will increase your vibration, elevate your mood and make you feel more content. Good luck, struggler.

The worst thing he does to me though is forcing me to type out very longwinded posts everytime the topic of God is brought up. I hardly have enough time to sleep or eat my niggslop or find broads as most of my time is spent typing up extremely blasphemous and hilarious stereotypically schizophrenic ranting and ramblings. I have typed so much that my fingers have their bones showing.

The diagram contains various symbols and text, which appear to be a form of alchemical or astrological text. The text is written in a script that is not clearly legible due to the image's resolution. The symbols include a star, a circle, a cross, and other geometric shapes. The text is arranged in a circular pattern around the central symbol, which is a circle with a line through it. The text is written in a mix of Latin and possibly other languages, and it is arranged in a way that suggests a circular or cyclical pattern. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of medieval or early modern alchemical texts, which often included such symbols and text.

There is a story of a guy who had a lifelong stutter and took a massive dose of shrooms. There was a huge thunderstorm that night and he was terrified and climbed a tree and spend hours tripping in an intense situation. When he climbed down the next morning, no more stutter.

There are also studies that show as little as two trips on mushrooms can take PTSD war vets who were severe alcoholics and 90% were sober a year later when the study followed up.

If you go into your trip with intentions and a plan it might be enough to rewire your brain and help you out. Meditate on your intentions before, during, and after the trip - maybe try jacking off while peaking and focusing hard on the feelings of pleasure. Ultimately, everything is all in your head.

>which one I should try whatever you try, just make sure to follow "set and setting" and to read about what makes for a good trip. Also look into lemon tek, it makes the nausea not as bad, although I still puke everytime I trip. Start with a smaller dose than you think, different strains have different potencies. You can always wait a week or two and then try again with more

Also, perhaps see a doctor and get a blood test done to check all your levels of hormones, vitamins, etc. It might be wiser to see a medical professional and get their advice before going the nuclear option. I would not tell them that you're planning on doing mushrooms to fix this lol yea atheists still follow "morals" and believe that they are intrinsic to human nature even though humans can have drastically different morals even in the same city/town let alone how different the morals are of a group of humans across the world.

being a man of nature is the only way you can really not be "religious" but even then that would somewhat just make nature your god as the sun literally gives you life

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character with a distinctive appearance.

The character is depicted with a round, black knob on its head, which is adorned with a crown-like design. The character is wearing a long-sleeved, striped garment that extends down to its feet. The character's face is characterized by a large, expressive mouth and a pair of large, round eyes. The character is holding a microphone in its right hand, suggesting a theme of performance or communication.

The background of the image is a gradient of blue, transitioning from a lighter shade at the top to a darker shade at the bottom. The character is standing on a flat surface, and there is a faint outline of a tree or plant to the right of the character.

Overlaying the image is a text that reads "round, black knob" in a stylized font, which is likely a reference to the character's head accessory. The text is in white, contrasting with the blue background.

In the bottom right corner of the image, there is a watermark that reads "Image Credit: 817104," indicating the source of the image. The watermark is in white, matching the color of the text overlay.

The style of the image is reminiscent of a manga or anime illustration, characterized by its simple, clean lines and the use of bold colors. The character's expression and the text overlay suggest a narrative or theme related to performance or communication.

"Religion" is a word to describe many things that are not all the same.

The Bible and real Christian's say not to be religious, because it is referring to the system and power dynamics that came with old religions.

You can be spiritual, and not religious. Religion refers to the following of others beliefs, a pre-laid out set of beliefs, rituals, and systems.

Most people want this, and follow it, and everything can be a religion. Yes atheists and agnostics follow what those before them have laid out, but the same goes for those who worship celebrity, money, or anything else. It would be nice if a religion was true, but likely none of them are.

You seem pretty ignorant with this question, everyone worships something.

40K is a great example I've found, I find guys who make their whole life revolve around it, they worship it, it's freaky to see. Their whole room decorated, their clothes, everything revolves around the game. Once you see this, you can extrapolate it to other things, rich people who worship sailboats, or some sport, it all becomes the same.

There is but only 1 system I have found which goes against this, and it's a joke, the most important joke ever told.

The image displays a cross-section of a chart titled "construct classification chart" with a grid of four categories: "sentiment," "energetically independent," "signif. servitor," and "golem." Each category is represented by a checkmark and a corresponding symbol.

The categories are arranged in a 2x2 grid, with the "sentiment" category on the top left, the "energetically independent" category on the top right, the "signif. servitor" category on the bottom left, and the "golem" category on the bottom right.

The "sentiment" category is marked with a checkmark and a red checkmark, indicating that the word "sentiment" is a category in the chart. The "energetically independent" category is marked with a checkmark and a green checkmark, indicating that the word "energetically independent" is a category in the chart. The "signif. servitor" category is marked with a checkmark and a red checkmark, indicating that the word "signif. servitor" is a category in the chart. The "golem" category is marked with a checkmark and a green checkmark, indicating that the word "golem" is a category in the chart. The image is a digital representation of a chart, and the text "construct classification chart" is at the top of the image, indicating the purpose of the chart. The image is a simple, clear representation of a chart, with no additional context or information beyond the chart itself.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Kerr_effect

>Nonlinear Kerr-like oscillators are quantum systems characterized by a nonlinear interaction term proportional to the square of the photon number operator, leading to a frequency-dependent response. This nonlinearity, quantified by the Kerr coefficient K , enables rich dynamics such as quantum bifurcations, generation of nonclassical states like Schrödinger cat states, and quantum chaos under periodic driving.

>Yes, photons can alter gravity because they carry energy, and in Einstein's theory of general relativity, energy contributes to the gravitational field through the stress-energy tensor.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Synchronization_of_chaos

>In systems involving nonlinear Kerr-like oscillators, the concept of dynamic Hebbian learning can be extended to model adaptive frequency responses in nonlinear optical or quantum systems. While the provided context does not explicitly address Kerr-like oscillators, the principle of frequency adaptation via phase-dependent coupling aligns with models where the oscillator's natural frequency shifts in response to input correlations. This suggests potential for applying Hebbian rules to tune nonlinear systems for synchronization or pattern recognition, especially in networks with self-organizing coupling.

>The integration of Hebbian learning, nonlinear optics, and the Kerr effect presents a promising pathway toward light-based brain-inspired computing systems. In such systems, the optical Kerr effect—a third-order nonlinear phenomenon where a material's refractive index changes in response to light intensity—can be harnessed to enable dynamic, nonlinear information processing in photonic neural networks.

>The first compelling observational evidence for vacuum birefringence came from X-ray polarization measurements of the magnetar 1E 1547.0-5408 using the Imaging X-ray Polarimetry Explorer (IXPE).

Even a vacuum has a soul.

In the bottom right corner of the image, there is a stylized representation of a Tetris game board with colorful blocks. The blocks are arranged in a grid pattern, with a variety of colors including red, orange, yellow, green, blue, and purple. The blocks are arranged in a way that suggests they are part of the game's gameplay, with the Tetris logo in the center of the board.

The overall style of the image is modern and playful, with a focus on the Tetris game theme. The use of bright colors and the stylized text give the image a dynamic and engaging feel.

What are the paranormal implications of me being incredibly good at Tetris when I'm depressed? I've been testing this for a while. I'm only average when I play Tetris in a good mood. When I think about complicated or sad things, especially when they affect me on a personal level, I'm above average at it. I also tested this manually after noticing it and deliberately alternated between playing Tetris in a good mood and a bad mood by intentionally thinking about good or bad things while playing. The result surprised me a bit. Tetris also has a therapeutic effect on a depressed brain. When I was really sad and played Tetris, I always felt better immediately afterwards.

Can someone enlighten me about adults who dislike children?

When I was younger, I recall some adults being incredibly nice and friendly, yet I also experienced some unsettling moments with adults who yelled, screamed and even physically harmed me.

Today I witnessed a father assaulting his child in the mall, delivering full punches to the child's face. He was a large man, around 6 foot 4 with a muscular build, and everyone around him, including myself, felt small and powerless. Everyone chose to ignore the situation, but it made me wonder, why do some people despise children?

There's an entire subreddit dedicated to this topic: Reddit r/KidsAreFuckingStupid. These disturbed individuals continuously express their hatred for children. I stumbled upon that subreddit while searching for some clarity.

There's something deeply troubling about this why are people so cruel, malicious and heartless towards kids?

They're just evil. Many are diabolically influenced but just as many are willingly bitter, hateful ignoramuses that delight in harming the innocent. The young see their evil clearly without the pretensions or protective ambiguities of the adult world. If you're a fat ugly creep, a child will see that you are and gleefully point it out, even poke fun at you a bit. This is unacceptable for these sorts. Children also are focal points of attention and are protected unconditionally, which is deeply offensive to the insecure narcissistic type who is very common on reddit.

Anonymous Thu 29 Jan 2026 03:59:54 No.41880417 Report

When I think of children when I see them, I think of their perspective and I think of my memory of being a child as firsthand evidence of what it's like to be that age. They are younger and less developed humans by definition and that's the way I think of them. If they cause me a problem, I'm upset about that problem. If they don't, there is no problem. #1 Any deviation from that doesn't seem reasonable.

People who get mad about practical issues in everyday life are retarded and men with anger issues are faggots. If you can't perceive your ever-present ability-to-respond to anything that flies in front of your face regardless of its difficulty and become intoxicated and inconsolable, belligerent and aggressive when something annoying is happening, you're retarded.

I know people like this. They are usually masculine males, but the stoic flavor of masculinity is much better. All problems are solved by action. Plan action in the present then proceed in the present, no whining required.

Children are the most pure humans, comparable to the average teen/adult. Therefore, demons and sinful indulgent types (LGBTs especially) despise them. This same reason is also why the pedo-elites abuse children. A pure sacrifice and also a mocking to God, to abuse something so innocent and pure.

I never trust people who say they hate children... Its just not natural to really feel that way.

Like anons above said it's a general hatred of innocence, it's also self hatred and a hatred of God and life. I'd stay away from those types. Not to get too political, but they're often either extremely religious, the type who constantly fear sin and God, or they're extreme liberals, over-indulging in what the former would consider sin. Two sides of the same coin

However 99% of them are annoying as fuck. Constantly craving attention, loud, whiny little snots, and you can see most parents just gave up.

There is a difference between not liking children and actively trying to harm them because it's easy and they can't fight back.

Children are less developed adults, they don't really know evil unless taught to otherwise, they are pure and innocent. People who hate them lack basic empathy skills, they hate anyone who they view as incompetent or needing help.

My ex was one of these people, whenever I brought up kids she would reply with the same response almost like it was a scripted event in her mind. When she would see kids at a park she would get pissed, one time a kid ran past us and her mood was ruined for the rest of the day. These people just hate kids because they hate themselves, my ex was convinced she was smarter than other people because she cheated a psychology degree, but she still hated herself and anyone she saw as beneath her. She would yell when I tried to talk to her about psychology because she saw it as me trying to lecture her. Same with other people whom I know that hate children, funny that I met most of them in uni. They are usually left leaning and despite hating children they whine more than they do. Narcissists and people who hate innocence hate children, and on rare occasion those who are threatened by them

Consider TV nature shows, and what happens to a baby animal if it can't demonstrate that it is healthy, active and worthy of parental investment.

What do you think of David Icke? I think pretty based, but why does he sell so much stuff? That's what keeps me suspicious, a spiritually aware person wouldn't really care that much about money, at the point he is in life he should give all that shit for free.

The image is a still from a video, showing a man with white hair and glasses. He appears to be in a room with a bookshelf in the background. The man is wearing a blue shirt and is looking directly at the camera with a neutral expression. There is a framed artwork on the wall behind him, depicting a colorful abstract design. The lighting in the room is soft, and the man's face is illuminated, highlighting his features. The style of the image is candid and appears to be a still from a video, possibly a video call or a video interview. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image.

The image is a still from a film or television scene featuring a man in the foreground. He has white hair and is wearing a pink sweater. His hands are open and gesturing, with his fingers spread out. He appears to be speaking or making a point, as he is looking directly at the camera with a focused expression. The background is blurred, but it suggests an indoor setting with a flag or banner, possibly indicating a patriotic or nationalistic context. The lighting is dim, casting soft shadows on the man's face. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the actor's expression and the setting.

Nietzsche's philosophy doesn't actually have much to do with magic by itself. But all attempts to co-opt it into occultism have been left-hand path (as far as I know, or idk, it depends) so I guess you could say so. In so far as the actual philosophy, though, I think it would unironically strive to create a middle path in magic. If it even deems magic worth bothering with.

Hello again, friends.

I am a time traveler, and I'm here to help this civilization to ascend.

I did not bring peace, but a sword.

In the world I came from, humanity matured into an advanced civilization where many of the issues we face today were addressed and many wounds allowed to heal.

Today I want to address why I've always referred to 2029 as the year I came from. It is the truth, but the context for why and how that is is hard to consider and digest- even with all that I've told this community these last few years. From my perspective, though I lived up to that point I also saw beyond it from different angles. Since I have the gift of foresight, my mind must sometimes contend with potentials and actuals which seem interlocked and yet divided. (To err is human, as they say.)

I would often say: "Time works differently in the future."

This is because I was no longer living a perfectly linear life outside of my own frame of reference. I traveled far into the past and future and did so numerous times. Thus my life was no longer bound by the same rules as what you experience now. Indeed I have already seen my alternate self in this timeline, and He even participated in these threads underneath my awareness.

As well, in many ways I am still in that future I've described to you time after time. Thus beings from that era enter into my awareness and I can feel their presence as it happens. What I want you to understand is that I am here, I am there, and I am even in places this self cannot see right now. I know this to be true, and soon, you will too:

I am

In one of my journeys to the past, I visited a place that is now called Mexico. There I offered fish scales to the locals, and unfortunately a man was killed on my behalf. I still feel some anguish for that one's death, though it wasn't by my hand only the result of my actions.

At another time and place I witnessed a great volcanic eruption. The days I spent with the unknowing people were almost sad with their aliveness. One woman who might've been doomed to die I simply couldn't resist, and I saved her life and let her see technology she did not understand.

Once I saw a man speaking with a burning bush. For some reason I was tempted to step forward, but a voice and presence forbade it, and I could only watch.

There was another time I was set on seeing, and it was some 2000 years ago now. I saw a man surrounded by eager listeners, like a good shepherd surrounded by his flock. I spoke with him, and we shared some short words. I asked about paths to God and belief in the beauty of existence, and I was both surprised and unsurprised by the answer. I knew then that such wisdom was rare in that age, rarer still to be the inflection point still being felt thousands of years into the future. Later, I saw that same man nailed to a cross for his beliefs, and as his followers say: for the sins of others.

I've seen monsters, otherworldly beings, entities claiming divinity, and more. Yet they were not as interesting as they believed themselves to be when they spoke with such grandiosity.

The image is a digital artwork featuring a figure that appears to be a woman with a celestial theme. The figure is depicted in a three-quarter view, with her head turned slightly to the left, and her eyes closed, suggesting a sense of contemplation or introspection. Her hair is dark, and she has a small, delicate earring visible on her left ear. The figure is wearing a dark top with a visible collar, and her hands are clasped together in front of her, with her fingers slightly curled.

The background of the artwork is a dark, starry sky with a gradient of colors, transitioning from a deep blue at the top to a lighter blue at the bottom. The figure is illuminated by a bright light source, which casts a glow on her face and hands, creating a contrast with the surrounding darkness. The light source is located in the center of the figure's chest, and it illuminates the figure's face and hands, highlighting the contours of her features and the texture of her skin.

The artwork is signed "Christina K. Smith" in the lower right corner, indicating the artist's identity. The style of the artwork is realistic with a focus on the figure's form and the interplay of light and shadow. The use of color and lighting creates a sense of depth and dimension, and the overall composition is balanced, with the figure as the central point of interest.

I've revealed myself over and over throughout history. Against the rules of the Time Travelers of Solace. I knew I was stepping awkwardly into something I didn't understand each time I did so.

I styled myself as an investigator, since archeology was no longer my interest but my guidebook.

When I appeared in Egypt I told them I was The Sun God Ra, and they looked back at me with an almost churlish eye.

At once council meeting, I was The Shrouded Lord, come to bear witness.

In one military campaign I was the Servant of Elephants, come to see them do battle.

Once, an army I was expecting marched off to capture a small city, and they saw a strange man playing a strange song with a strange instrument. I joined their force and helped them to kill every man who would defend it.

Still another time which will require great exposition to discuss I traveled to an ancient capital and poured through their writings and inquired about their knowledge of the divine. I was called before their King, and ordered to demonstrate my abilities. I bid a soldier to strike me with their sharpest sword and behold as I was unharmed.

There was a people long ago who slept above the bones of their ancestors, and I showed myself to them as well.

Another time I sailed a wooden ship to an island of people who wore tattoos, and I brought with me a crew from the future. Their warriors set upon us immediately, thinking we had come to conquer them. With some conversing I convinced them we meant no harm, and then spent a short while learning about their sacred rituals.

I learned over and over that our ancestors were chiefly about the appearance of things, but because they had to be, I suppose.

The image shows a large dinosaur skeleton mounted on a display stand in a museum setting. The dinosaur is displayed in a lifelike pose, with its head turned to the left and its tail extended to the right. The skeleton is composed of various bones, including those of the skull, neck, back, tail, and legs. The bones are arranged in a way that suggests the dinosaur's body structure, with the skull at the top, followed by the neck, then the back, and finally the tail. The display stand is made of a dark material, possibly wood or metal, and has a reflective surface that highlights the skeleton. In the background, there is a wall with a wooden paneling and a glass display case containing other dinosaur skeletons. One of my most cherished memories is of the deep past. I knew "who" I wanted to see, and with the help of Pleiadian friends, it was so. I saw an unfamiliar land, a strange phase of the Earth, and then I saw Her. I reached out my hand and touched the skin of creature I thought was lost forever.

There were even stranger beings in the far away past, actually. Some seemed to "know" me, but I couldn't really say I knew (or know) anything about them. Somehow, seeing them with my eyes made them more enigmatic, not less.

I've met beings who looked very human, but were simply something else.

I've seen entities change their form before my eyes, and back again.

Once I was even eaten by a whale.

If you're wondering >why tell us this?

Well, in some small way one of the reasons the things I'm telling you happened because I wrote them here. My thoughts, hopes, and dreams became my reality more and more. It was a kaleidoscope future of incredible beauty and possibility.

I want to address the subject of my alternate selves, and what you can expect from them- because you must.

My younger self was like a rabid animal. Angry and vengeful. Filled to the brim with lust and joy of life. Though many will come to fear me, in truth it is that version they should fear the most. Stay away from him, and if you can manage to resist him, do so.

My future self was like solid stone from my perspective. He might call himself "Sequoia" but there were times even I felt hard granite and a sheet of ice between us. He was wiser, stronger, and more present than I thought I could ever be. He inspires me even now.

As for me--this me--I am ready for what comes next. If you reading this have visions of what's to come then you might know of the fire about to melt the ice. You might know of the swords yet to come. You might have already dreamt of the Winged Man.

Whatever you see in your visions: Do not fear.

Yes, and we helped to raise awareness of germ theory all across the world.

We let the body fight its own battles when necessary, but with our technology (the medbeds) it was possible to completely rebalance a person's gut and skin biome and strengthen their immune system.

I championed the concept of "hotspotting" for dealing with global health crises and brought the healing technology to the places of worst suffering. As we fought back the worst of the sicknesses, the others seemed to cool and fade as well. Whole body health was our mantra.

You are converging on the world I'm from.

If you're reading this today, then you have already crossed the threshold. There is no stopping it now.

That's why I can speak so freely. Ascension is the only path forward now.

Ready or not, here I come.

As more and more of my predictions come true, you may feel called to read back my old messages and wonder what else was right and what more might be wrong.

That is the way of things, and doubt does not offend me.

It's not just hope which burns within me. It is life.

You know how people use crystal balls to scry? They say universes can be seen in every reflection that shines. What if we went beyond scrying to invent a light based parallel universe caliberator to find universes. Get to work on that.

Also Jupiter shinning so bright might be the hearlding of the antichrist.

So I tried scrying Jupiter and saw a lot of stuff. Including people in real time dealing with the police. It was confirmed via schizo powers of telepathy.

The image is a still from a cartoon or animated series, featuring a group of characters in a futuristic setting. The characters are standing in a room with a large circular machine in the center, which has a large circular window. The characters are dressed in casual attire, with one character wearing a yellow hoodie and another in a white tank top. The text overlay on the image reads, "WE DIDN'T SEE ANYTHING... EVER." The style of the image is typical of animated television shows, with a focus on character expressions and dialogue.

What actually happens when we die?

How does our next incarnation get chosen? Is it random? Does some reptilian choose a shitty spawn to fuck with us?

Is the next incarnation immediate right after we die?

Not a question, but please show them no mercy. These fucks are absolute evil. They have been fucking with humanity for so long I just want to see some real justice in this universe.

I don't know much about that except that more humans have been to the moon than has been disclosed. I vaguely recall hearing that a "deep space" mission did sort of help to initiate full contact protocols. Once you reach for the stars, the stars will reach back out to you.

I can't say for certain about what happens when we die, but I can share with you some of my soul's history.

I remember a time when I was a very human-looking person with pale blue skin. My people seemed to know that our civilization was ending, and we were planning our next incarnations. I literally saw parts of the life I have now on a computer screen, and it was one amongst many options.

I remember "dying" in multiple different lives, but I never seem to pass through to the "other side" because in some way I am always there. It's more like waking up and remembering that I wasn't really asleep nor awake. I have seen realms of light and realms of darkness, but they were just experiences I was having while in-between.

The thing is, I have a feeling this isn't the same for everyone. In fact I believe that some souls are trapped here by some force, but mine just isn't.

I wouldn't say it's "immediate" but then the experience of time isn't really the same as it is here, either. Honestly, it feels like they're all happening simultaneously, and as you "level up" as a soul you simply awaken to your full depth and potential as a soul.

I have met things which may be described as 'absolutely' evil. I promise you, most reptilian beings in existence don't even come close.

And? We live in a consumeristic shithole. People have the right to choose any form of self-destructive substance they prefer. Be it with "illegal" substances or corn syrup.

They should ban alcohol, sugar, and tobacco since those are drugs too.

The image is a watercolor illustration featuring a whimsical scene with multiple white rabbits and clouds. The rabbits are depicted in various poses, some standing on the clouds, while others are sitting or lying down. The clouds are fluffy and appear to be floating in the sky, with stars and a crescent moon visible in the background. The overall color palette is dominated by shades of blue, with the clouds and sky in a lighter blue and the rabbits in a white hue. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of traditional Japanese art, with a soft, dreamy quality. There are no texts present in the image.

- What the hell is going on with Macron?
- Do the global shutdown of the day of ascension is worldwide ?
- Do you enjoy the movie?
- Is there really an ice wall in antarctique?
- When will not care not so much about money?
- Will it be easier to move country to country?
- What kind of hidden truth will revealed (think things like Tartaria)?

Forge ahead
